In the course of an article to the Himalayan Times headed "Awakening in Nepal" Ganesh Damodar Savarkar urges that Nepal should be regarded as a part of India and writes:—"It is absolutely necessary that we should be in the know of what signs of national awakening in Nepal are manifest, what movements are in full swing there and of what use they would be to us from the point of Hindu Sangathan. And it is equally necessary to send the echo of our agitation in their midst." Ras Behari Bose writing in the Abhyudaya condemns the action of the Parsi mill-owners of Bombay in carrying on anti-Japanese propaganda in collusion with those of Lancashire and takes Mr. Wadia severely to task for remarking that Japan is the traditional enemy of India. He says:—Was it Japan which destroyed India's magnificent handicraft and compelled her artisans to resort to agriculture? Was it Japan which imposed duties for ruining Indian cotton trade? Japan purchases not only cotton but also iron from India, and if she stops purchasing these poor cultivators and the iron trade will suffer badly. It is no use calumniating Japan. All this is the conspiracy of Lancashire directed on the one hand to counter the Japanese competition and on the other to win India's sympathy for weakening her national agitation. British capitalists are making alliance with Indian capitalists for completely weakening the masses. Britain's eyes are not on the Japanese rivalry, but on keeping India in perpetual subjection. The Bharat Jiwan writes:—The soldier who was charged with committing rape on a sixty-year old Indian woman at Simla has been acquitted. It is useless to comment on this. Such samples of "justice" tell us how terrible our subjection is. The crime has been made light of simply because the accused was white-skinned. Well, it is drops which go to fill the jar (of sin). The Bharat Dharma writes:—Really on the face of this earth there is no race more philanthropic than the British. They entered America and assumed sovereignty there. They subjected the natives of that continent to various tortures and even burned them. The latter have now become almost extinct and their patrimony is being enjoyed by the former, (surely) for the sake of philanthropy. Trusting and patient Indians left their homes and went to Africa, Fiji, Java, Sumatra, etc., and made them habitable places. Now the British have appropriated them; they are driving out the Indians from there and are not even prepared to recognize the authority of the Empire, (surely) out of philanthropic considerations. They have by no means been less philanthropic in respect of Australia, Ireland, Belgium and other countries. Australians survive now only as labourers and the British hold all the authority there. The British placed Belgium in the forefront in the Great War and got it destroyed. They duped the American President and thereby defeated other powers. It was all a piece of philanthropy. They got Indian troops to fight in Afghan, Persian and Turkish wars and got them killed even in the battle-fields of France, only out of philanthropy. When they put their foot in this sacred land of India there was such an ebullition of their philanthropy that they could not resist the temptation of saddling her with the burden of philanthropy more heavy than mountains. Warren Hastings committed forgery. Lord Curzon committed perjury and found himself in a tight corner when exposed. It was all for the sake of philanthropy. They are not giving us swaraj even now, only out of philanthropy. It is philanthropy which is impelling them to send Indian troops to China in utter disregard of the protests of the members of the Legislative Assembly. The calamity to which the Chinese are being subjected has also its origin in sheer philanthropy. What a philanthropic people these British are? We pray that this sense of philanthropy may not go to the length of injuring the British themselves besides the whole race of mankind. The Desh Bhagat agrees with the view of Pandit Motilal Nehru and Lala Lajpat Rai that the Indian Air Service will be a tool to further the interests of British capitalism and militarism at the expense of India and says that the establishment of British aerial bases in India will open a new chapter of suffering for the country. English statesmen will through this new vehicle be able to send their troops more easily to strengthen India's fetters of slavery and will also be able to transport Indian troops more quickly to any country which they may choose to enslave. They will also be able to suppress the Indian nationalist movement and to overawe peaceful citizens easily by threatening them with bombardment from the air. All Indian nationalists in the Assembly should, therefore, unanimously vote against the grant of money for the Air Service and if the Viceroy certifies the grant united India should raise its voice against it as in 1921. We hope Indians will not be taken in by Sir Samuel Hoare's seductive phrases and will never allow England to realize her new aerial ambition in India.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Vartman complains that while in response to the request of a meeting of Muslims of Lahore the Punjab Government has taken action against certain Hindu papers for publishing articles in connexion with the murder of Swami Shraddhanand, it has taken no notice of those inflammatory speeches which were made by Muslim speakers at that very meeting. After quoting passages from some speeches the paper says:—These speeches offended against decency, law and humanity and no civilized Government can afford to ignore them. But the Punjab Government has taken no action against the speakers. Is law applicable to Hindus only and are Muslims beyond its reach? Will not such speakers bring about some dire calamity? Are not the roots of disturbances being watered in this way? Is not such policy bound to lead Hindus to the conclusion that the law or the Government are not intended for their protection. The Shankar refers to the application of section 144 against Pandit Kali Charan at Cawnpore and to a Muslim meeting at Lahore at which speeches calculated to create hatred against Hindus were delivered and says:—We wait to see what action the bureaucracy takes against such transgression of law. If it fails to take any action it will open the eyes of those who still hold that it does not favour the Muslims. The Abhyudaya warns the Arya Samajists and specially the Sanatanist Hindus against the present "mean manoeuvre" of Khwaja Hasan Nizami which is intended to create a schism between the two. It refers to Mr. Mahomed Ali's remark that the Khwaja is a Government spy and says that at any rate the failure of the Government to proscribe his book Dai-i-Islam or to take any action against him in connexion with his activities calculated to create communal and sectarian hatred goes to confirm the suspicion. Discussing Dr. Moonje's presidential address at the Seva Samiti Conference at Gujranwala on January 29, the Hamdam says that while the enthusiasm of Hindus for physical culture is in every way commendable, it would be sowing the seeds of strife to paint lurid pictures of Muslims and to advise Hindus and their womenfolk to arm themselves in self-defence. The need is to create an atmosphere in the country in which both Hindus and Muslims would respect each other's religion and womankind. The Haqiqat says that the painful propaganda against Muslims and their religion carried on by the Arya press of Lahore and Delhi under pretext of Swami Shraddhanand's murder is now becoming intolerable. Since December 23 the Milap, Pratap and Tej have been continually publishing articles, some of which will make the blood of every Muslim who reads them boil. The Arya Musafir complains that M. Abdul Karim, the editor of the Muslim Sewak (Agra), has published in the issue of January 24 a dirty and scurrilous poem entitled "The reality of shuddhi" which has seriously wounded the feelings of Hindus by calling Muslims their sons-in-law. Muslims recite this poem in the markets and there is great resentment among Hindus. Government should immediately mete out adequate punishment to the editor of the Muslim Sewak for this improper act, otherwise there is fear of a breach of the peace. Hindus should exercise patience on this occasion. One Hamdard Azamgarhi writing in the Mashriq complains that Hindus are being unduly favoured at the expense of Muslims in the Education department of the Azamgarh District Board. Hindus are being sent to the Normal School in larger numbers than before and in new vacancies only Hindus, especially Aryas and Kshattriyas, are being appointed. Partiality is also shown to pathshalas as compared with maktabs.

Music before mosques.

Commenting on the Madaripur riots the Abhyudaya says:—The Government has itself helped to aggravate this malady by not severely dealing with those who take the law into their own hands in connexion with music. The Muslims forcibly stop processions even if they are taken out under a licence. If this action of theirs is not anarchical, what else it is? If the Government wants to maintain peace and uphold its laws its duty is to bring to book those who take the law into their own hands or incite others to do so. High officials ought to exercise firmness and punish the law-breakers of Madaripur. The paper condemns the attitude of the Government towards the Hindus of Barisal and Madaripur and says:—In both these places the Muslims did not show the least regard for law and tried to stop the (Hindu) processions in front of mosques, delivered inflammatory speeches and even desecrated Hindu temples at Madaripur, but far from punishing the miscreants the Government punished the peaceful and law-abiding Hindus. We want to know what justice this is. The Government is aggravating the malady by resorting to such a perverse policy, and if it continues to follow it peace-loving people will begin to think that it cannot protect their lives and property. The Aj says that the conviction of the editor of the Forward for the allegation that the authorities do not discharge their duty in Hindu-Muslim disputes shows what liberty of writing Indians possess. Patuakhali Satyagrahis are being rigorously repressed; Bengali youths are being arrested in Calcutta in connexion with the Saraswati poojah; images disappear from roads in a crowded city like Calcutta and yet an editor is punished for saying that the authorities are not discharging their duty. Is this the way to maintain peace? Is it by such acts that the authorities hope to convince the people of their neutrality in communal disputes?

Muslim affairs.

The Aligarh Mail deprecates Mr. Haye's suggestions regarding Government inquiry into the affairs of the Aligarh University and writes:—We wish to bring home to the Government that Muslim opinion all over the country will highly resent an inquiry solely controlled by Government and its minions and will take it as a fresh encroachment and a new onslaught on the rights of the Muslim public. That is a point of first-rate consideration for the Government before it answers Mr. Haye's inopportune and inadvertent question in the Legislative Assembly. One Talib writing in the Mashriq complains that owing to the overwhelming majority of Hindus in district boards and the election of Hindu chairmen Muslim interests are suffering and appeals to Government to appoint official European chairmen to hold the scales even between the two communities. The Hamdam regrets that the Sangathanist Hindus of Calcutta are not prepared to let the bones of the New Market fakir rest in peace, even though two years have elapsed since his burial and the Calcutta Corporation has decided by a majority to exhume his corpse. The Hindu members of the Corporation are bent on desecrating his grave even though he cherished no enmity towards Hindus. This action will again embitter Hindu-Muslim relations which had of late been improving. The Medina also writes in a similar strain. The Suhail-i-Yemen says that the editor of the An-Naim has shown his dignity and manners by calling the Shias "enemies of Islam," "Rafazi," etc., in the November number and by asserting that wine and adultery are permissible among them. The paper quotes other passages also to show the bad taste of the An-Naim.

Indian States.

The Medina cites facts and figures to show that in the Hyderabad State the Hindus enjoy full civic and religious rights and more than their due share in the administration and says:—It will be seen how baseless is the charge that the Hindus are subjected to injustice and oppression by the Nizam. We fear that if the Hindu papers and leaders persist in carrying on false propaganda against the Nizam the Muslims will be compelled to expose the affairs of the Hindu States which are a disgrace to humanity. While the allegations against the Nizam are groundless, the tyrannies which are being perpetrated in Hindu States over Muslims are really shameful. It is a fact that in Bharatpur persistent efforts are being made to demolish mosques. In Kashmir the Muslims have been relegated to the background and a handful of non-Muslims have usurped their rights. Such is the religious bigotry and communal fanaticism of Hindus that even small jagirdars and raises do not tolerate azans in mosques situated in their estates. The Oudh Akhbar says that if Indian States had been jealous of their rights their number would have been double of what it is at present and they would not have been in such a sorry plight that the biggest ruling chief can be deprived of his heritage owing to the displeasure of a single individual. Now, however, they seem to be awaking and are holding a conference at Patiala. This conference should ask the Royal Commission on Reforms to grant complete responsible government to British India and the Princes themselves should grant their subjects a potent voice in the administration so that their political status may be in no way inferior to that of their brethren in British India.

The Bengal detenus.

Referring to the "disclosures" made by the Forward regarding the hardships inflicted on the detenus the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The wail that rises from the Bengal homes will soon ring from all over this land. These internments might bespeak strong rule; this might be the best method of combating anarchy, but this is surely not justice and it is certainly not statesmanship to lacerate the feelings of a great population. Even if the detenus are released tomorrow it will take years before the scar disappears. In the course of an article urging the release of the Bengal detenus the Vartman writes:—If there are conspiracies, it is the Government which is responsible for them. It wants to crush the natural aspirations of the people. By its behaviour it has taught and is teaching the people how to conspire. It does not want to hear anything evil against it and does not mend its ways. It wants to rule through repression, which is unnatural.

The United Provinces Ministry.

The Haqiqat asserts that Mr. Chintamani is furiously intriguing against the present ministry not with a view to serve the public interest, but in order to secure ministerships for himself and his supporters and warns members of the Council not to be taken in by his spurious propaganda. The opposition party organized by Mr. Chintamani is hopelessly outnumbered by the ministerialist party organized by the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Yusuf and that is why the latter has incurred the special displeasure of the Leader which is conducting a vigorous campaign against the present Ministers.

The Patuakhali satyagrah.

The Anand views with approval the Patuakhali satyagrah and hopes that Hindu volunteers from all parts of India will come forward to sacrifice themselves at the altar of their religion and will not rest in peace so long as they do not achieve success in their endeavour. The Shanker exhorts the Hindus all over India to save India's honour by making the Patuakhali satyagrah a success and says that if the people succeed in stopping the bureaucratic injustice the dawn of India's emancipation will be nearer.

Indianization of services.

Referring to the shortage of British officers in the Indian army the Leader writes:—India cannot afford to pay more for attracting British recruits and if they cannot be had in sufficient numbers on the existing conditions, it is necessary both on grounds of economy and justice to Indian aspirations that a larger number of Indians should be recruited to the ranks of the King's commissioned officers.

The Moplahs.

In the course of a series of articles headed "Exterminating the Moplahs", strongly protesting against the colonization of the Moplahs in the Andamans, the Aligarh Mail writes:—"A quinquennium has elapsed since the outbreak of the Moplahs into a tumult of independence and for it they have paid dearly with nothing less than their own blood, but mean vindictiveness based on brute force has not yet given up its cowardly attempts to drive out poor Moplahs from Malabar . . . . This policy of victimizing which is also incidentally the policy of extermination of the Moplahs from Malabar is being studiedly pursued by Government with cruel hard-heartedness in spite of the fact that its own committee of four appointed some time ago to inquire into conditions of the Andaman Islands has unequivocally and stubbornly opposed the scheme of their colonization with the Moplah prisoners."

Age of consent.

Supporting Dr. Gour's Bill for raising the age of consent to 16 years the Leader writes:—The question of a suitable age of consent is one of national importance. We would be glad if it is raised to 16 both in the case of husbands and outsiders.

Foreign affairs.

The Chinese situation continues to receive prominent attention in the Press. The Najat says that it is now established that Britain is the most greedy power of the world in respect of enslaving Asiatic nations and establishing her influence in the East and she always despatches her troops wherever European domination appears to be endangered. Seeing the Chinese successes she began to be afraid of the loss of her privileges and trade in China and incited other powers to take action. They have all refused, and it is Britain only which is so solicitous of the safety of her nationals that she has sent heavy reinforcements. Britain's action in helping the Chinese rebels shows that she is not sincerely desirous of a settlement and wants to retain her special privileges. Britain's policy of deceit might have succeeded with a less acute people than the Chinese who are already fed up with British high-handedness, and the only way for Britain to maintain her prestige is to concede Chinese rights before she is forced to yield them. The Desh Bhagat regrets that the British are bent on picking up a quarrel with the Chinese by concentrating troops at Shanghai simply because it is the cheap blood of poor and innocent India which will flow and says that if Indians unite and make it impossible for Britain to get aid from India in the Chinese operations she would immediately come to an agreement with China. Indian nationalists should therefore at once map out a programme to deprive Britain of Indian aid. The Aj urges the Army department to publish a communiqué to make clear why Punjabi battalions are being returned to Hongkong from Shanghai. The Hamdam complains that Ibn Saud has practically placed himself under British tutelage to gain British assistance against Yemen and urges the Khilafat Conference and Moatmir Islam to vote against the Hedjaz being allowed to remain under his control.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

A poem entitled "The reality of Shuddhi" reproduced by the Muslim Sewak (Agra) from the Zarif Punch of Delhi has evoked a storm of protests in the Hindu Press. The Pratap says that the writer of the poem has heartily abused the Hindus. He has called the Muslims the sons-in-law and the sisters' husbands of the Hindus and has asked them "not to feel shy or cast down their looks (in shame)." The poem is full of mischievous sentiments. It evinces meanness, brutality, barbarity, shamelessness and savagery. This is due to the indifference, cowardice and heartlessness of the Hindu community. If the Hindu community possesses the least sense of self-respect it should render impossible the hurling of such attacks, otherwise it should be taken for granted that it does not know how to protest. The Shankar refers to the poem, to the Government's attitude in connexion with the playing of music before mosques and to the action taken by it against the Vichitra Jiwan and observes:—All this shows to what a great extent the bureaucracy is oppressing the Hindus and siding with the Muslims. It is showing absolute partiality to Muslims. If any Hindu had published any such poem the readers can imagine what his fate would have been, but what can we say of the policy the object of which is to set the two chief communities of India by the ears? This poem will surely incite the Hindus, but they should not allow themselves to be carried away by this, inasmuch as all this is being done by a third enemy with the object of increasing his strength. The Arya Mitra says:—In the poem published by the Muslim Sewak every effort has been made to incite the feelings of the Hindus. Does the Government think that the publication of such filthy verses is justifiable? Can one party shower filth over the other under British protection? Referring to the action taken by the Government against Rangila Rasul, Vichitra Jiwan and the Milap the Jat Vir wonders why the Government does not take similar action against Muslim papers like the Muslim Sewak which are making filthy attacks on great Hindu personalities. It urges the Government to restrain Muslim papers, preachers and writers from emiting poison against the Hindus. The Parivartan (Saharanpur) complains that a most offensive poem, likely to endanger the peace of the city, has appeared in the local Zarif dated February 4, and inquires of the United Provinces Government whether it takes action only against Arya writers. It reproduces the poem which is entitled "India must needs become the centre of Islam" and in which the following lines occur among others. "Islam must needs become a bed of roses in India; the Arya satan will be annihilated and become nameless. The times are fully aware of your reality . . . You have turned into sons of Satan by becoming reciters of the Vedas. O Aryas, hear from me one absurdity of the Vedas . . . Sometimes she is (your) wife who was (your) mother. One day the temples will become mosques. India must needs become the centre of Islam. Firaq, we also are sitting with iron clubs and fiery whips. The Arya satans will be thrashed for becoming opposed to the readers of the Shariat". Commenting on this the paper (Parivartan) says that the insult offered to the Arya Hindu community and the holy Vedas is extremely deplorable and inquires whether a breach of the peace would not occur if the Hindus were to indulge similarly in improper language regarding the Holy Quran and the Prophet. The Zarif ridicules the objection taken by the Parivartan to this poem and says that Muslims are really showing remarkable restraint as will appear from a perusal of the following extracts from an anti-Muslim poem which was sung in an Arya procession at Amritsar:—"We shall have to sound the drum of Shuddhi; we shall have to burn the Quran; we shall have to come into the field; we shall have to annihilate Islam; we shall have to demolish Mecca and Medina. Hindu, Muslim and Christian brethren, all will have to be converted. All will have to enter the fold of the Vedic religion. All will have to have their Niyog (temporary marriages) performed." The Sewak inquires of Government why no action has been taken against the Zarif which has seriously outraged Hindu sentiment by publishing a poem in which the Aryas have been called satans and sons of Satan and wonders whether Government is intimidated by the bravery of Muslims. The Najat is convinced that the Hindu leaders have now adopted a settled policy of injuring Muslims and keeping them down, being firm in the faith that the Hindus being in a majority can carry all before them only if sufficient enthusiasm is created. It therefore advises Muslims to make up for their paucity of numbers by compactness and organization. If they do not unite against their enemies they will be annihilated as a nation and reduced to the helpless state of the Jews. The Musalmanon ka Akhbar complains of the anti-Muslim attitude of the Hindus generally and of the foul abuse indulged in by Arya papers of the Punjab, ever since Swami Shraddhanand's death and hopes that the warning issued by Government will prove effective and relations between the two communities will now improve. The Bedar reproduces as a sample of offensive Hindu propaganda after Swami Shraddhanand's murder a poem from the Shahid number of the Tej (Delhi) in which it is said that Swami Shraddhanand gained a higher status than the prophet Muhammad because while the former attained martyrdom, the latter did not and that the teachings of Islam are to blame for the act of Abdul Rashid and should be wiped out from the world. It also publishes as a rejoinder to the above a poem entitled "Muslim's Rashid" by Muslim in which it is said that his (Swami Shraddhanand's) wickedness ordained him for hell and that when he (Swami) raised the undesirable question of Shuddhi the truth-seeking murderer thought that he (the Swami) was a mischief-maker and he would gain merit before God by beheading him. Though this is not the teaching of Muslim law, yet he had to be punished for his wickedness. If anybody killed him (Swami) in excitement, he (Swami) received the fruit of his mischief-making. There is no defect in the teachings of Islam and there can be no peace in India until the Aryas are wiped out of the country. The Tarjuman inquires whether Government which is so proud of its justice has seen the Shahid number of the Tej which contains matter highly offensive to the feelings of Muslims and quoting some lines from it writes:—Can there be anything more insulting and offensive? Does Government want to see the fun of the patience and forbearance of Muslims by keeping silent? One Shams of Gaya writing in the same paper complains that the venomous writings of the Aryas are taxing the patience of the Muslims and appeals to Government to intervene in the interests of peace and order. He quotes from Al Aman of January 23 a poem entitled the "Corpse of Tabligh" and inquires how Muslims can put up with being styled as mean and then gives a poem by himself written as a rejoinder. It is entitled "The marriage of Bi-Shuddhi—reply to the brickbat" and the following lines occur among others in it:—O Soz, if you thus pour forth the venom of your heart I will say openly that you are mean. When Bi-Shuddhi collided with a Muslim Swamiji pursued her very much He inquired why she had joined the enemy. She replied that she had gone to lift the corpse (of Tabligh). (There) a Maulvi violated her chastity and married her to Islam. She remained with Islam for six months; no Arya reached there even by mistake and not even Madan Malaviya inquired about her. When she began to serve Islam signs of pregnancy began to appear, and when her belly swelled then the Muslim said that ..... ji had been reborn. The Aj complains that there is no provision in the Penal Code to punish forcible conversion from one religion to another as disclosed by the remarks of the special magistrate of Pabna in a communal case against Muslims and urges that this deficiency should be made good as early as possible.

Indian in the Colonies.

With a few exceptions the South African settlement has been favourably received by the Press. The Leader writes:—We have to judge the settlement not by an absolute standard, but by the practical test of what was possible in the circumstances. The question is not whether it is the best that could be conceived, but whether it is the best that was possible. Our answer to it is the same as Mahatma Gandhi's:—"It is the best that was possible." Its first feature that would strike every one is that the Areas Reservation Bill has been dropped. In other words, that for which every one strove has been accomplished. Certain details of the new scheme of "assisted emigration" are open to criticism and its operation will have to be watched with care. But we have no hesitation in saying that viewed in the whole and in relation to the circumstances the new scheme is much less objectionable and will be attended with much less hardship than what we have been familiar with, and deserves to be supported by Indian opinion. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The Government of India must be congratulated on the superb stage management of the South African settlement. They have condescendingly taken Gandhi into confidence and secured his qualified support. But we must express disappointment on a compromise that has now and for ever acknowledged the principle that the Indian is an alien in a place which he has helped to build up and that the moment he is not wanted he can be repatriated or re-emigrated. South Africa has gained all along the line in this game of compromise. We wonder what the Britishers would think if ten years hence a self-governing India found that the average Britisher must either conform to the "eastern standard" of existence or be sent away from India on payment of passage money from Bombay to London and three hundred rupees. This settlement which has considerably strengthened South Africa most cruelly humiliates India. It has branded our countrymen as slaves waiting to be transferred to service anywhere. The human cattle are to be flocked into the Pinjrapole with a provision of twenty pounds for fodder. The process is absolutely non-violent, and hence perhaps the unstinted blessings of Gandhi. The Vartman writes:—In spite of Mahatma Gandhi's appreciation of the settlement the country should not exult at it. We should not forget that the Class Areas Bill has been merely suspended; it may be taken up again. The settlement is not irrevocable and what is the guarantee that it will not be violated like the Gandhi-Smuts agreement? The provision of assisted emigration is most terrible. The settlement is calculated to benefit South Africa more than India. A superficial observer may find some good points, but there is no substance in it, nor can there be any until we acquire the strength of compelling others to respect our rights. The Aj more or less agrees with the views of Mr. Gandhi and welcomes the declaration regarding the arrangements to be made for the education of Indians domiciled in South Africa, but entertains misgivings in this connexion owing to wide discretion being given to provincial Governors. It remarks that the condition laid down for giving equal wages to Indians as against Europeans for similar work will adversely affect the Indians and urges the Legislative Assembly to give due weight to this question and its implications. It insists that in carrying the scheme of assisted emigration Indians should not be repatriated to other countries except with the consent of the Government of India and that the Legislative Assembly should be entrusted with the task of preparing the list of such countries. The Abhyudaya congratulates the members of the South African deputation on the settlement and remarks that though it is not the best, it is the best that was possible under the circumstances and would improve the condition of Indians in South Africa. The Hamdam welcomes the settlement in so far as it saves Indians in South Africa from the Asiatic Bill, but demurs to the clause requiring Indians to adopt Western civilization. The satisfaction of Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. Andrews with the settlement is a happy augury, but Indians in South Africa should not permit themselves to be lulled into a false sense of security and should be fully prepared to combat future emergencies.

Music before mosques.

The Aj writes:—Hindu-Muslim lawlessness has increased awfully in Bengal as if there is no ruler there. The only means which occurs to the authorities to preserve peace is to stop Hindu religious functions. The Muslims will commit disturbances if music is played before mosques. It therefore follows that the public rights of the peaceful Hindus should be forfeited. This is the sample of administrative justice. This dispute cannot be satisfactorily settled without organized and collective Satyagraha. If the leaders of Bengal will not pay heed in this direction, they will fail in their duty and the masses may commit improper acts which will give an easy handle to the "steel frame" to justify its existence. The Anand commends the example of the inhabitants of Barisal in insisting on their right of taking out processions with music on public roads although they have been arrested for it, and urges the Hindus of other provinces also to follow their example and to be ready to sacrifice their all for the vindication of their religious rights. The Desh Bhagat reproaches the Hindu Sabha leaders for their indifference towards the Patuakhali Satyagraha which is being carried on to protect the all-India Hindu right of music before mosques, and says that it is this that has encouraged Government and Muslims to adopt an increasingly severe attitude towards the Satyagrahis. Local organizations should be set up everywhere to provide men and money for the struggle.

Political propaganda.

The Aj writes:—Britain is much exercised that European countries supply aerial armaments to China. Imperialist whites think that nobody except themselves has the right to keep arms because God has given them alone the monopoly of ruling the world. Signs are not wanting that the lease of such a monopoly is to terminate in no distant future. The paper heartily supports the suggestion to invite the Chinese delegates to the conference of oppressed nationalities to India to make them acquainted with public opinion in this country and thereby convince them that Indians have no sympathy with Britain's policy in China. It says that in order to create sympathy between oppressed nationalities their respective representatives should visit one another's country. Referring to Syed Tufail Ahmad's speech in the United Provinces Council on educational backwardness in these provinces the Medina writes:—What else can be expected of a foreign Government than this that it would keep us ignorant and illiterate in order to impress upon us the need of its guidance? If the destiny of India were to-day placed in the hands of her own sons, we would in the course of seven years raise the percentage of literacy to 93 per cent. Nothing but ignorance and poverty can be expected of slavery and subjection.

Muslim affairs.

Syed Nazir Hashmi writing in the Mashriq says that in view of the fact that the Hindus are not generous in their treatment of their depressed classes and the Aryas are persistently fomenting anti-Muslim feeling, it would never be safe to leave Muslims at the mercy of the Hindu majority by abolishing separate representation. In the course of a leading article strongly criticizing Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan's Bill for the registration of marriages and divorces among Muslims the Medina writes:—It is impossible for us to find space for the publication of the numerous communications and resolutions which we have received against this Bill which involves serious interference with the religious liberty of the Muslims. Opposition to this measure has been growing apace and has now become very intense. We shall lose faith in the prudence of the Doctor if in spite of this he has the temerity to proceed with the Bill in the Council. We have not found a single point in justification of the measure. The Islamic injunctions relating to marriage and divorce are clear enough and are higher than all such mundane laws. The Ulema regard the Bill as an undue interference with the Shariat. Mercy should be shown to poor Muslims. Their married life should not be taxed for the financial requirements of local bodies.

Muslims are poor. Their lot should not be made harder. Cases of misbehaviour are rare in the Muslim community and they should not be increased through this measure. The proposed law would also encourage litigation. The Sada-i-Muslim urges Government to accept Sir Ibrahim Jafar's proposal for the expenditure of the accumulated interest on savings bank accounts of Muslims on Muslim education. The Hamdam regrets that the Muslim members of the Azamgarh district board tired of the anti-Muslim attitude of the Hindu majority as shown by its refusal to help maktabs with a single pice beyond the grant fixed by Government and to sell pound cattle to butchers, have resigned in a body. It is to be hoped that influential persons will try to bring about reforms and reconciliation.

The Kharagpur strike.

Protesting against the shooting of strikers at Kharagpur the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—If employees cannot protest against their grievances without being shot, the sooner all legislatures are abolished and martial law introduced with General Dyer as Viceroy the better. It makes the heart sick to realize that such things can happen under a Christian administration. This recklessness in endangering human life is appalling. The Aj writes:—Who will not be reminded of his terrible state of subjection on reading accounts of the strike on the Bengal Nagpur Railway and of the deeds of the champions of peace? Indeed, India is such a subject country that its rulers can do anything in the name of the preservation of peace. It is no use complaining against firing. It has now become a common occurrence. We fail to understand how firing was resorted to "with the previous permission of the district magistrate." This means that blank forms of death-warrants were signed even before trial. It is useless to comment further on this. The heavenly rulers have received from on high the right to interpret law in any way they like and to enact fresh legislation according to their sweet will, and it is useless to take exception to it. But one cannot help asking why firing was not resorted to on the occasion of the general strike in England, while this was the case in dealing with an insignificant strike in India. The Pratap also strongly protests against the bayoneting of the strikers and says:—The demand of the Kharagpur strikers is just and their quiet attitude testifies to their spirit of forbearance. Their grievances should, therefore, be fully investigated and a thorough inquiry should be made into the cases of bayoneting and firing. The Abhyudaya condemns the attitude of the Government in connexion with the bayoneting of the strikers at Kharagpur and referring to Mr. Joshi's statement that no other Government in the world makes such a use of bullets and bayonets observes:—Mr. Joshi has probably forgotten that the Government of India is far more civilized than other Governments of the world and that its code of civilization justifies the shooting and bayoneting of the unarmed, the helpless and the labourers. We deem it sufficient to say that we do not see any difference between this civilization of the Government and the barbarity of the barbarous nations, and if it continues to behave in such a civilized fashion it will have to repent for its doings some day.

The Steel Protection Bill.

The Aj apprehends that with the help of Mr. Jinnah and his followers the principle of imperial preference in respect of British steel may be adopted in the Legislative Assembly and the Indian consumer may be compelled to purchase costly British steel. It says that so far the bureaucracy quietly helped British industries with Indian money and caused loss to the Indian tax-payer, but now the disastrous system of openly promoting British industries with the help of legislation is also being introduced. The only suitable reply to this terrible injustice will be to start an agitation for the boycott of British steel. It is to be hoped that the All-India Congress Committee will thoroughly consider this question in consultation with steel dealers.

Indian States.

The Hamdam thinks that the Muslim labourers killed by gun fire in the recent rioting at Indore must have been unarmed and says that in view of the fact that Muslims lose their lives in larger numbers in all disturbances, the Muslim members of the Assembly should demand an assurance from Government that innocent Muslim labourers in the State are not falling a prey to communal prejudice. Reverting to the subject in a subsequent issue the paper recalls the demolition of a mosque last year in Khargon, Indore State, when Mr. Balwant Singh was the provincial governor there and says that as there is no Muslim in any high office in the State, the poor Muslims who have been the greatest sufferers in the recent riot and are now being arrested in large numbers will not get justice and urges Muslim members of the Assembly to come to their aid.

The new public school.

Referring to the appeal for the establishment of a new type of public school the Abhyudaya says that this school is evidently meant for the rich only as none among the common people can afford to spend Rs. 125 per mensem over the education of their children, but it can do no good even to the rich and is sure to defeat its objects inasmuch as true unity and co-operation are impossible so long as the higher classes do not associate with the common people in educational institutions and Hindi is not the medium of instruction.

Foreign affairs.

Referring to the "threat" of Britain to Russia the Aj says:—It is idle to blame Russia. She is only taking advantage of Britain's blunders. The British imperialists are unable to resist the temptation of domination. They themselves declare that Russia wants to create trouble in India too, and yet they do not make a friend of the latter. The best reply to Russian propaganda will be to accord a good treatment to the non-white portion of the British Empire and then Britain can have no fear of Russian hostility. In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—The Russian Government has given a crushing but well-deserved reply to the British threat. We too can judge from the speeches of the British authorities and writings in the British press that the Russian charge against the British Government of breach of even ordinary rules of courtesy in its dealings with Russia is not without foundation. The very letter to which Russia has given the reply furnishes an example of this charge. The Medina writes:—The most wonderful feature of the Chinese imbroglio is the unusual and unexpected forbearance evinced by British statesmen. The spirit of General Dyer has to remain restless in the scabbard. Events are daily tending towards a sanguinary conflict, but it is certain that Britain will not fight singly with China and is on the lookout for a sacrificial goat.

The budget.

The budget has been accorded a mixed reception in the Press. There is a general complaint that there has been no reduction in military expenditure and no grants have been given to the Hindu and Muslim universities. The Leader writes:—"Sir Basil Blackett's stewardship has been marked by a considerable improvement in the financial position of Government, and though he has been subjected to much bitter criticism in connexion with his exchange policy, it cannot be denied that he has handled the Indian finances in a masterly manner. . . . It is a notable achievement that in addition to announcing the extinction of the provincial contributions, which we hope will be permanent, he has proposed reductions in the duty on motor cars and tires, the abolition of export duty on hides and tea and of the stamp duty on cheques and bills of exchange payable on demand. . . . It is surprising that in spite of the demands that have been made for the further reduction of military expenditure Sir Basil Blackett should have acted as the mouthpiece of the military department in saying that no further reductions are possible. Everyone knows that the existing forces are not all required for the defence of the country, and that they are being maintained at their present strength and state of efficiency for imperial purposes. The expenditure on them should be reduced at least to the figure recommended by the Inchcape Committee." The Indian Daily Telegraph characterizes the budget as a rich man's budget and says:—The budget is a tempting morsel on the whole, but even after a casual perusal of the Finance Member's speech one cannot but be struck with the thought that Sir Basil was making a strategic use of the surplus budget in his forthcoming duel on the ratio issue with the stalwarts of the Currency League. Viewed in this light, Sir Basil's prosperity budget assumes certain sinister aspects. The remission of the provincial contributions is the sugar coating for the bitter pill of the 18*d.* ratio, which the Finance Member guilefully wants the Assembly Members to swallow unquestioningly.

Railway administration.

The Railway administration has come in for a good deal of strong criticism in connexion with the Railway budget. The Leader writes:—The strong criticism to which the Railway administration was subjected in the Assembly and the crushing indictment of the Railway Board by Pandit Motilal Nehru were well deserved. The Railway administration is in the hands of irresponsible men who may not care much for non-official criticism, but unless they pay heed to the warnings and criticism uttered and take steps to check abuses and extravagance, a crash will come sooner than later. The appointment of a capable and independent Indian as a member of the Railway Board is absolutely necessary to safeguard Indian interests. The Aj writes:—The greatest wrong is done to India in the matter of purchasing railway materials for her. Indians have to pay more for their purchases and still British and not indigenous industries are benefited thereby. Although many crores of rupees have been spent on railways in this country, yet the country has not been able to produce a single indigenous expert and we have still to depend upon others for the management of railways. Not only have thirty thousand waggons been unnecessarily purchased for fifteen crores of rupees for India in England to relieve unemployment there, but to add insult to injury, the British steel industry is now to be developed at the cost of India. India has to suffer all these losses simply because the bureaucracy is not responsible to the legislature, does not care in the least for public opinion and has the support of the army at its back. Commenting on Mr. Srinivas Iyengar's resolution regarding the Railway Board's grant, the paper says that although the Government now manages four important railway lines, yet it follows the same illiberal policy towards Indians as was done by companies. The worst feature of the existing irresponsible government is that on the one hand doors have been closed against Indians acquiring fitness and experience, and on the other they are taunted for want of capable members among them. Under this Government Indians have been emasculated by being disarmed and high military posts are not available for them. Who are to blame for this? Those who have destroyed the manliness of the country taunt the Indians that they cannot grant swaraj to them lest the latter should fall an easy prey to other foreigners in case the former leave their country. There will be found many instances in history of deceit, trickery and crookedness, but this example of shameless selfishness stands prominent by itself. It is the misfortune of this country that its money is spent on encouraging foreign industry at the expense of the indigenous one. Railway expansion in India at the cost of thirty crores of rupees annually was undertaken simply to relieve unemployment in England and with the same object in view has legislation now been passed for the protection of British steel. All this calls for a wholesale reorganization of the Railway Board and the departments connected with it and for the appointment therein of capable Indians who can look after the interests of the country which are betrayed by foreign interests. The Abhyudaya views with amazement the purchase of 30,000 waggons with the object of removing unemployment in England and enriching that country and says that it is in this way that the trade of India is ruined and people of England make merry.

Political propaganda.

The Abhyudaya takes Mr. Moberly severely to task for opposing the resolution regarding the release of the Bengal detenus and remarks that it is really the Government's cruel policy which is responsible for the spread of anarchism in the country, and the only way to uproot it is that officials should change their attitude and at least maintain the sanctity and importance of justice. The leaders have done their best to uproot anarchism, but if still it continues to exist, the responsibility for it lies on officials whose actions are nothing short of naked injustice. The Aj writes:—Mr. James Langford in his speech at the annual meeting of the European Association, Calcutta, expressed surprise that nationalist India and her press took delight in Bolshevik successes, but were grieved at British ones. But there is nothing to be wondered at in this. This is natural. Who is not pleased at finding an equal adversary to his opponent? The bureaucracy does everything to remind us that we are an utterly subject and helpless people. Can such things inspire love in Indians towards their autocratic rulers? Mr. Langford says that India has no worse enemy than Bolsheviks. How can we believe it? Bolsheviks are certainly the enemy of the British Empire, specially of its Eastern domination; but they have never manifested hostility towards India. Can we become lovers of that domination for the protection of which the British Colonies are not prepared to give a single soldier or a single pie, but poor Indians are required to spend crores of rupees every year and our armies are sent to fight against our own neighbours? Militarist administration, black Acts and police frightfulness can never turn a country into a well-wisher of its foreign rule. Referring to Sir Frederick Whyte's remarks that the reforms had banished all fear of a revolution in India, the Najat asserts that the changed attitude of Bengal does not betoken the success of the reforms. General dissatisfaction still prevails in the country and Indians know full well that causes of discontent like general indigence, prevalence of disease, semi-starvation of a large part of the population, lack of sanitary arrangements and means of communication are still oppressing weak India. The only difference is that Hindu-Muslim differences have given Government a little breathing time. If this is to be interpreted as the success of the so-called reforms and our real grievances are not to be attended to, Government may rest assured that a time is sooner or later to come like that when Lord Reading had to send Malaviyaji as a messenger of peace from the snowy heights of Simla to the hut of Mr. Gandhi. Government should not pride itself on the present state and should instead of clapping hands set itself to removing long-standing grievances, else it will see times much worse than what it has seen previously. The Desh Bhagat says that complete freedom is the only remedy for India's troubles and can be gained by following Mr. Saklatwala's programme of communism and organization of labourers and peasants. It was this programme of boycott and mass organization which released Russia from the clutches of the Tsar's despotic government. This programme is also practicable as most of the men who join the police and army are peasants and labourers. After this organization has been effected, aid should be taken of foreigners and of the boycott of goods as was done in China to commence the struggle for liberty. Young men should volunteer for this work and thus put an end to the political apathy prevailing in the country. The Krishna takes exception to Mr. Saklatwala's characterization of Mr. Gandhi's advocacy of boycott of British goods and of non-violence as his two grave blunders and says that no undue tenderness for British labour should stand in the way of Indians exercising pressure on Britain to concede their political rights and that violence is impracticable in the present circumstances.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Tarjuman publishes a lampoon satiring transmigration and pointing out that according to this theory Hindus can be re-born as beasts of prey and carrion-feeders and partake of all sorts of dirty things. The Mashriq urges that in view of the atrocities practised on Muslims in the recent riot at Bahadurganj (Ghazipur district) only Englishmen should be posted as Collectors and Judges in the districts of Azamgarh, Ghazipur, Ballia and Gorakhpur, and the Government of India should recommend to the Secretary of State that the Royal Commission should not be sent out and the Reforms should be suspended. The Haqiqat says that the news of the Hindu attack on Muslims at Bahadurganj (Ghazipur) is creating excitement and anger among Muslims. Such are the effects of the sangathanist teachings of Malaviyaji and Lalaji and it has to be seen how far Government does justice to the innocent Muslims. The Mashriq says that the condition of Muslims is bad in all local bodies and Government should suspend the reforms until Hindus and Muslims abandon their present selfish attitude. Members of local bodies should be nominated in such a manner that neither community might be in a majority and the chairman should always be a European Collector.

Indian States.

The Aziz-i-Hind urges the responsible officials of Dholpur to publish a statement showing the proceeds of the lottery, the amounts received by Jolly Brothers and the Maharaja Sahab and the amounts disbursed to the unfortunate purchasers of tickets. In another article the paper urges the deputation of responsible British officials to Bharatpur to put a stop to the Maharaja's extravagances and follies. The Sada-i-Muslim invites the attention of the Government of India to the fact that Muslims are not allowed in Indore to offer prayers en masse as enjoined by their religion and says that unless matters are mended immediately serious dissatisfaction will spread. Referring to Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang's telegram to the Government of India praying for intervention in the matter of prohibition of prayers in mosques in Indore, the Hamdam regrets that Hindu-Muslim tension has now spread to the Indian States also, and says that it shows gross maladministration to interfere with the religious freedom of the subjects. The Medina says:—Only recently Dr. Moonje held out the threat of becoming a Shivaji and a practical demonstration of this has been given in the disturbance in the Mahratta State of Indore. All our correspondents unanimously report from Indore that the Arya Samajists, are fomenting trouble in the State and taking advantage of the Hindu raj, are harassing Muslims. The Zulqarnain fears that as there is no Muslim high official in the Indore State the Muslim accused in the recent riot will hardly get justice and hopes that Muslim members of the Assembly will come to their rescue.

Indians in the colonies.

Commenting on the South African settlement the Sainik writes:—As it is the settlement is not bad and is sufficient for consolation. What else could we do in our present state of slavery and helplessness? The future alone will show how the term "western standards of life" is interpreted. The Azad welcomes the South African settlement as the best in the circumstances and says that Indians cannot enjoy their cherished status in foreign lands until they gain swaraj in their own homes. The Sada-i-Muslim congratulates the Government of India and Sir Muhammad Habibullah on the satisfactory settlement of the South African question and says that the dropping of the Class Areas Reservation Bill has been a great concession to Indians. The Hamdam agrees with the suggestion of Mr. Gandhi that Mr. Shastri should be appointed as Indian agent in South Africa. South African Indians really need a leader of his calibre and sincerity at this stage.

The Bengal detenus.

In an article headed "Terrorization by Government" the Indian Daily Telegraph strongly criticizes Mr. Moberly's speech on the resolution in the Bengal Council regarding the release of the detenus. It says:—To think that such nonsense will be taken seriously in this country is to insult our intelligence. This comes as part of the propaganda of the kind that the Huns excelled in during the great war. Every time the Government has made a statement on the detenus, it has only helped to strengthen public agitation by showing up bureaucratic weakness. The Krishna says that it is downright Nadir Shahi to confine persons without trial and inquires why all the Bengal detenus are not released when the Government does not dare to take its case into court. India must needs be displeased when neither their release nor their trial takes place as she regards them not as criminals but as the vanguards of Indian freedom. Political prisoners, internees and exiles, it goes on to say, are our leaders. They are the true and loyal sons of India and Indian co-operation cannot be won by Government without their release.

The Khilafat Conference.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The Khilafat Conference held at Lucknow was a total failure in every sense. The Khilafat question is dead and buried in the limbo of oblivion. The Khalifa is dead and buried with the movement. To hold a Khilafat Conference now is like holding a conference on the Bengal partition question or to continue the agitation on the repeal of the Rowlatt Act. The Medina agrees whole-heartedly with every word of the presidential address of the conference and says:—Until the gates of western capitalism and militarism are closed it will be extremely difficult for India to attain independence. These gates are situated in the Muslim countries of Arabia, Egypt, Asia Minor and Palestine. The programme of tanzim which the president has put forward to attain these objects deserves consideration. If India wants freedom, if she wishes to reap the benefit of her natural resources, if she wants to occupy a place of distinction in the world, if Muslims want the restoration and rehabilitation of the Khilafat, if they want to settle the Hedjaz problems and to strengthen inter-Muslim relations and wish to live peaceful lives in India, then it is essential to act upon the suggestions contained in the learned address. The Najat observes that the views of the president deserve the attention of all Indian Muslims on account of their comprehensiveness, sobriety, dignity and tolerance and deep insight into the needs and sentiments of Muslims.

The Patuakhali satyagrah.

Urging the Congress and Hindu Mahasabha to assume control of the satyagrah campaign the Aj writes:—We require organization and leadership as was displayed by the Akalis. The time has come when the unjust orders of the bureaucracy should be courageously disobeyed. If the communal leaders will undertake this work the Congress will be constrained to help them. The Bengal Congress Committee will be well advised to assume control of this agitation and show that it is not a communal or religious question, but one relating to the civic rights of the people. Who knows that the bureaucracy which sides today with the Muslims and disallows Hindu religious processions on public roads will not side with the Hindus tomorrow and deprive Muslims of their civic rights? This question does not concern Hindus or Muslims, but affects the entire nation. It is a question of the protection of the rights of the people by saving them from those who fight in the name of religion and those who make them fight. When such an aspect of the question has been made evident the Congress will be able to assume its control.

The exchange ratio.

The Pratap contends that India would lose if the exchange rate of the rupee is raised above 1*s.* 4*d.* and says that the Government is trying to raise it because it is foreign, and its real object is to rob Indians and capture Indian markets. This it can do only by increasing the consumption of British goods in India. If the rate of exchange is raised, the foreigners will be able to fill their godowns by purchasing raw materials from Indians at cheap prices and also sell their finished products to us at cheap prices. Indians will thus be losers in every way.

Adi-Hindu Conference.

The Medina whole-heartedly supports the demands made on behalf of the depressed classes by the president of the Adi-Hindu Conference held at Allahabad and says :— We assure the president that Muslims stand by him with regard to these demands and are prepared to help him. If he wishes, Islam is ready to receive him with open arms and will accord him the same position as is given to Syeds and Sheikhs.

Maharaja of Nabha.

The Indian Daily Telegraph, which of late has been persistently carrying on propaganda on behalf of the Maharaja of Nabha, publishes a letter from its Delhi correspondent reporting the talk he had with a Sikh—" probably a retired military man ". The latter is reported to have said :—The Maharaja is a martyr to our cause. His place in our heart is next to our gurus. The treatment he has received at the hands of our uncharitable Government has taken the lance deep into our hearts. The wound will bleed and bleed until the last drop is exhausted.

The Barisal riot.

Referring to the riot in the Barisal district the Leader writes :—The main cause of the disturbances that have taken place is the issue of music before mosques. If the Government of Bengal had adopted a firm attitude from the very beginning and had not in any way countenanced preposterous Muslim claims in this matter, the situation would not have grown so serious as it has. They followed a short-sighted policy and are reaping the fruits thereof.

Muslims affairs.

The Najat asserts that there are numerous evils among Muslims in regard to marriages and divorces and wonders why some Muslims are opposed to their registration. If they object to Government restrictions, they should suggest some better method of reform.

Foreign affairs,

The Aj hopes that the whole of nationalist India will welcome the Chinese delegation to this country and thereby impress upon it that though the Government of India under instructions from the British Government may do whatever it likes, the heart of nationalist India is with nationalist China. It also hopes that later on a similar delegation will be sent from India to China, and in this manner mutual sympathy will be created between these two big countries of Asia. The time has come when we should take part in international politics and strive to create mutual sympathy and understanding among Eastern countries. For this purpose the Congress should establish a separate foreign department.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Charges and counter-charges regarding the publication of offensive and blasphemous articles, especially poems, are becoming a feature of the Hindu-Muslim tension. The Balidan complains that the Muslim writers are emitting the most virulent poison against Hindu gods and goddesses and says that so long as the sale of such books is not made impossible they cannot be stopped from doing so. It regrets that the tendency to wound the feelings of the Hindus is increasing among Muslims day by day and that the Government does not take any notice of it. One Parmeshwari Sahai writing in the Arya Mitra quotes a number of passages and verses from the Radd-i-Hindu (published in 1845), Tuhfatul Hind mai katha saloi (published in 1861), and Tegh-i-Faqir bar gardan-i-sharir (published in 1873, i.e., two years before the establishment of the Arya Samaj) to show that the Muslims who blame Arya Samajists that their writings are full of attacks on Islam, had themselves been showering indecent and filthy abuse on Hindu deities, saints and religious preceptors even before the existence of Arya Samaj. The Chand publishes a lengthy rambling article dealing with the weaknesses of the Hindu community and their remedy. It urges that "Hindu organization" based on justice and equality to all classes and sexes is the only means, whereby the Hindus can exist as a living community. This organization should not be inspired by hatred towards Muslims, but should surely strive to suppress mischief-making by fanatical Mullas and Maulvis and to wipe out of existence the name of mischievous and bloody Abdul Rashids from the Indian history. Babu Jagannath Saran writing in the Arya Mitra emphasizes the importance of the Arya Samaj nagarkirtan processions and says:—The Government ought to formulate its policy in this matter in accordance with justice and to study the feelings of the Arya Samajists, because if this unrest among them continues to increase and the Arya Samajist youths make ready to sacrifice themselves at the altar of religion, the result will be highly undesirable and the Government will have to encounter great difficulties. The satyagraha of the Arya Samajists would be something different from that of the Congress or the Akalis. The India ridicules a poster by one Tufail Ahmad stating that the Prophet had appeared in a dream to urge the pushing on of tabligh work and says that the shuddhi of the Aryas has created a commotion not only in this world but also in Paradise and the Prophet himself has to work by visiting people in dreams. God cannot bear to trouble his friend and has therefore started tabligh work in the heavens by means of magic lantern shows. The paper publishes a poem in which the following lines occur among others:—O Aryas, do not break the heart of God's friend (the Prophet); for God's sake, do not become the pilots of this shuddhi.

What for will God retain this earth if there is neither Kaaba, nor Medina nor Karbala? If the soul of Mustafa (the Prophet) will wander from home to home in dream God might suspect it to be a public woman (harjaipan). The Arya Musafir ("Shahid" number) publishes Arabic verses parodying the style of the Quran in which it is said that the word of God was revealed to Kali Charan Sharma, that "Om" is to be praised as it redeems souls through transmigration, that the Quran is to be rejected and shuddhi should be obtained through the Aryas. The paper publishes a poem by Jugal Kishore Sharma, Arya Samaj, Bulandshahr, in which the following lines occur among others:—It (the Quran) has been proved to be the book of Hazrat Osman; the banner of the Vedas is flying aloft and that of the Bible and the Quran has been lowered in the world. That which Sheikhji regards as the word of God has been proved to be the book of Hazrat Osman. The sacred thread graces the body in place of the rosary; the false faith in fairies and boys has vanished. The paper publishes another poem headed "The reality of the letter lam" written by M. Hardayal Singh of Basti in which the following lines occur among others:—Why should we not raze to the dust Is (the) Lam (letter lam) (double entendre meaning both this letter "lam" and the religion of Islam). If you carefully consider the meaning of Is Lam after consulting dictionaries you will find high-handedness and oppression in Is Lam; it is the store-house of deceit and the soul of disorder. May the existence of Is Lam be wiped out from this world forthwith. Hate Is Lam, do not give it a place in your heart, otherwise it will lead to ruin. The state of Is Lam is bad. The paper publishes an article by Atmanand Shastra Vachaspati in which he says that Islam was spread by the sword and asserts that fanaticism is encouraged by promise of the joys of Paradise. Imaginary glowing descriptions of Paradise have enamoured people of Islam and the kisses of the life-giving lips of Hurs (fairies) have warmed the hearts and minds of Muslim religious warriors. Even the piety of Muslims is for this Paradise and these Hurs. Prayers also are for charming fairies. Sir Syed has said in his book Najmul Hind Tafsirul Quran that people in Paradise embrace and kiss and do shameful acts with Hurs. Even this Paradise will be enjoyed by a very few Muslims. They should therefore give up Islam and adopt the true faith. The Muslim Sewak says that the poem "Shuddhi ki Haqiqat" was a reproduction from another paper and recorded true historical events. It urges that it did not mean to incite a breach of the peace or to wound the feelings of any community, but only wanted to show what favours the Muslim kings did to other communities in the past and how the Hindus and Muslims were so united that they did not have any grievance against one another. The Arya Press has been crying for the head of the Muslim Sewak, though it itself has been publishing most objectionable matter insulting the Prophet and Muslims. The Shahid number of the Tej is a case in point. Government should prosecute the Aryas and have pity on its poor Muslim subjects. The Agra Akhbar asserts that while the Muslim Sewak has only reproduced the poem "Shuddhi ki Haqiqat," almost all issues of the Arya Musafir and the Agra Samachar contain actionable matter calculated to wound the feelings of Muslims and to excite hatred. Agra Muslims should appeal to the Magistrate for action under section 153A. The Shuddhi (sic) (Shahid) number of the Arya Musafir is full of objectionable matter. Referring to the disturbance in Bahadurganj the Medina writes:—According to the account of our correspondent the houses of Muslims were attacked by the Sangathanists without any cause and a Muslim fakir was killed. The whole village is said to have been desolated. May we ask the Collector of Ghazipur and the United Provinces Government what steps they have taken to protect the poor Muslims and to restrain the law-breakers and robbers? The Tarjuman refers to the resignation of Muslim members from various district boards and says that the situation in Azamgarh is due to the desire for domination of the Hindu majority. It recalls the riots in Mau and Mubarakpur in which the Hindus were worsted and wonders whether bureaucratic power is now sought to be utilized to make amends for defeats on the field of battle. If the authorities do not give their attention the old conflicts might be revived. If separate representation is not to be granted the Muslims would prefer to bid good-bye to the reforms and to have the control of the Government instead of the Hindus.

The firing at Ponobalia has evoked angry protests in the Muslim Press.

The Barisal riot.

Criticizing Sir Abdur Rahim's speech at the meeting of Muslims held at Barisal in connexion with the incident and the resolutions passed by it the Leader writes:—Will Sir

Abdur Rahim, who occupied a high position in the Government, say what those charged with the maintenance of law and order are to do when they are surrounded by an excited fanatical mob carrying lethal weapons? Are they to allow themselves to be meekly massacred? If the meeting had condemned those who defied the constituted authorities not in a peaceful manner but by a show of force and had also asked for an inquiry for fixing responsibility for the error which had led to more rounds being fired than were authorized and into the circumstances attending the firing, it would have received the support of all right thinking men, whether Hindus or Muhammadans, but the resolution as passed betrayed a spirit of irresponsibility and implied a support of lawlessness which was most probably due to the atmosphere of excitement caused by the tragic incident in which the meeting was held. Referring to the shooting at Ponobalia the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We must severely condemn an administration that cannot maintain peace in a village not proclaimed as a rebellious area without firing thirty rounds of ammunition and laying low twenty human beings. The executive that could not anticipate the trouble and prevent or provide against it deserves extinction. Again, the authorities have always hitherto bent their head before the Muslim lathi. If district authorities showed their will to prevent, as they shoot to cure, there would be no trouble at all. The Aj says that things would not have assumed such a serious aspect as they did in Barisal if the authorities had acted with firmness from the very outset in the matter of the protection of the civic rights of the people. Now the general Muslim public has come to think that it has acquired a right to stop Hindu processions in the name of mosques. The Haqiqat says that the terrible massacre of Muslims at Ponobalia has seriously outraged Indian Muslim feeling and urges the Bengal Government to appoint an independent inquiry committee as the statement of the local authorities is totally unsatisfactory. In fact this incident is no less painful and sad in its cruelty than the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. The Hamdam says that the blood of the unfortunate Muslims now appears to have become extremely cheap. The very fact that the Hindus and the police were not wounded shows that the Muslims did not make any attack, and it is strange that the military were ordered to fire. The loss of so many human lives is very terrible and painful, and we hope the Bengal leaders will force their Government to demand an explanation from the local authorities. In an editorial note headed "Hindu Dyerism in Bengal" the Medina writes:—The Hindu officials of Government have revived the memory of Jallianwala Bagh. There was Hindu raj, the Magistrate was a Hindu, the news agency was a Hindu concern, the telegraph master was a Hindu, the sky was Hindu and the land was Hindu and the atmosphere was Sangathanist. Who could in these circumstances come forward to save the lives of Muslims? Referring to the recent communal disturbances in Bengal the Desh Bhagat appeals for Hindu-Muslim unity and regrets that even those Hindu and Muslim leaders who desire complete independence for India are silent at this juncture. Reports go to show that Muslims are now taking the offensive everywhere. Matters have now reached extremes and the actions of Muslims are due to the partiality of the Government of India. Muslims had never done during the Moghul period what they are doing now. No doubt the English Government approves in every way of these actions of the Muslims and is inciting them by all possible means, but it is not wise on the part of Muslims to play into the hands of Government. Just now they have the support of Government and can thus injure Hindus, but they would be leaving a legacy of trouble for their coming generations which can lead only to the ruin of Islam and to the aggravation of their depressed state. The condition of Muslims is already pitiable and if sensible Muslims do not control the present situation Hindus will be forced to concentrate their attention on this question and to prepare like the Chinese for a civil war in which the Hindus will be alone and the Government and Muslims will be ranged together on the opposite side. The contest will prove disastrous to Muslims, though it will prove very embarrassing to Hindus also. But the Hindus are being forced by circumstances and cannot but adopt this remedy. Muslim leaders should, therefore, try to put a stop to these communal troubles. We believe that British statesmen are doing all this to crush the movement for freedom. They should, however, bear in mind that these actions will lead to their own undoing. The Muslims are becoming warlike owing to the support of Government, but martial spirit may be developed among Hindus also owing to repeated attacks and they may leap into the arena of warfare to defend their honour, lives and property. Government is not ignorant of the strength of the Hindus and must be aware that they are far better equipped than Muslims with knowledge of military scientific technique and modern methods of warfare.

Political propaganda.

In the course of an article complaining of the tyranny of the rich over the poor the Vartman writes :—There is theft in trade and robbery in business. The rate of exchange is raised and crores are robbed. What is all this that is being done in broad daylight? Robbery is committed, but the thief is not convicted. This is the progress shown by civilization. It has increased the thirst for blood. In the name of protecting one's interests excuses are put forward for declaring war. One Dammi Lal Sharma, vakil, writing in the Aj discusses the respective programmes of Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. Saklatwala and comes to the conclusion that khaddar cannot bring about the emancipation of India and that the organization of labourers and peasants, the boycott of foreign goods and cultivation of strength are an absolute necessity for the attainment of her true liberty. The Pratap says that in the aerial demonstration held at Delhi Indians were treated as no better than slaves. Black-skinned people were not allowed even to stand side by side with the white-lords. Some Indian raises were standing with their ladies among Anglo-Indians. A white military officer ordered some Gurkhas to turn them out. On the conclusion of the demonstration the carriages of Indians were detained so as to allow those of the Europeans to pass. When some Indians remonstrated the constable said that he was helpless as he had been so ordered by the Sahib. And we are so shameless, so fallen, such cowards and beasts that we allow ourselves to fall victims to such foolish, barbarous and brutal treatment. When the Gurkhas were turning them out Indians should have resisted with sticks and fists, but they lacked soul-force. We always humiliate ourselves and do not feel shame in doing so.

The budget.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—By its majority vote on the Executive Council charges the Legislative Assembly has recorded the resolution of the country that bureaucracy must perish. The Muslims had no hesitation in allying themselves with Mr. Jayakar and Lala Lajpat Rai. This has a significance as much to the Government as to the public : to the Government in that the policy of divide and rule may perhaps find support for some time more among the illiterate, but not with the educated Muslims : to the people that there is no cause for utter despair regarding the Hindu-Muslim problem. The Aj complains that the new taxes levied during the war have not yet been abolished and says :—The proceeds of the increased taxation have been devoted to the improvement of the prospects of high foreign officials and the development of foreign industries. The Finance Member has confronted the Assembly with a serious problem by raising the question of the exchange ratio after the budget and not before it, and it is to be hoped that the elected members will give him a reply similar to that they gave on the occasion of the enhancement of the salt duty and the question of the abolition of the cotton excise. Their foremost duty is to protect crores of cultivators by maintaining the exchange ratio at 16*d*. A comparison of India's expenditure on the army in proportion to the income of the Government with that in other countries fully exposes the hollowness of the official contention that no further curtailment in military expenditure is possible now. Although the reforms have been nullified by the powers of the officials being maintained intact, India has been saddled with extra heavy burden as a result of the recommendations of the Lee Commission and yet the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee to reduce military expenditure to fifty crores of rupees has not been accepted. This administrative policy—carelessness in the matter of expenditure and love of power—is the main cause of the dissatisfaction of Indians. If the maintenance and extension of British domination in Eastern countries were not included among the military requirements of this country, even half the strength of the existing army here would have been in excess of its needs. The Vartman writes : -We see that in spite of a surplus the Government of India do not propose to do anything to relieve the poverty of Indians. Every action of Government is intended for the benefit of white merchants and British officers. Indians will get no benefit from the surplus of three crores. The hard-earned money of the poor is being wantonly wasted, and this is what the bureaucracy regards as conducive to the welfare of India. Out of these tens of millions not a pice comes back to the pocket of the Indian peasant or labourer. The Surya says :—The huge military expenditure is a grave injustice to the tax-payer, especially in view of the fact that the troops maintained are far in excess of the needs of the country, that Indians hold very few commissions in the army, and that the army is repeatedly utilized to satisfy territorial greed. It is hoped that elected members will see through the game played by Sir Basil Blackett in making the remission of provincial contribution contingent on the acceptance of the 18*d.* ratio and will reject it in the national interests of the country as a whole. The changes proposed in taxation are more calculated to benefit foreign manufacturers than the general Indian public.

United Provinces budget.

The Pioneer writes:—Sir Sam O'Donnell was able to give a very good account of his stewardship of the finances of the United Provinces during the last four years and when he hands over his office the province should be in a sound financial position. The Leader writes:—The statement made by the Finance Member in the United Provinces Legislative Council in introducing the budget for 1927-28 on March 4 was as dry as a plethora of figures could make it and had nothing remarkable about it. The finances of the provinces would have been in a parlous condition if relief in the form of successive remissions had not come from the Government of India. In the Finance Member's opinion the debt position "is satisfactory and gives no ground whatever for anxiety." In our view if a more cautious and conservative policy of incurring capital liabilities had been followed, more money would have been available for the urgent needs of the province. But an extravagant policy has been followed in the matter. The Finance Member took an optimistic view of the future, but if the pace at which expenditure has been going up, in spite of efforts at retrenchment and economy, is maintained, then there can be no guarantee of less anxious times in the future. The budget as presented must be regarded as incomplete. Now that the Government have received a big windfall, will they in distributing their largesses keep in view the pressing need of the Benares Hindu University? The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The Finance Member's method of presentation of the budget lacked in clearness and lucidity. The financial situation revealed by the budget is on the whole an unsatisfactory one as the figures for income and expenditure show a deficit of 39 lakhs. The Aj says:—Although we would welcome the remission of provincial contributions, yet if this means that the burden of the cultivators should be increased as a result of exchange manipulations, we would pray to be saved from such generosity and would advise the Provincial Government not to build any hopes on doles from the Government of India, but to frame its budget in such a manner as not to allow expenditure to exceed the income. The excess of expenditure over income is a result of the "Lee loot". Although, as a rule, the remissions of provincial contribution are devoted to beneficial departments, yet their administration is not satisfactory simply because the cost of general administration and especially of the Police department and the salaries of high officials have been unduly increased. Besides, a very large portion of expenditure on beneficial departments is spent up in buildings and inspection. In a subsequent issue the paper gives figures regarding votable and non-votable items of expenditure to show how hollow the reforms are and how the Ministers and the Legislative Council are expected to perform the miracle of working them with officials who are not under their control. A study of these figures, the paper adds, will fully expose the hollowness of the contention that the reforms are the preliminary stage of swaraj.

The Indian States.

Muslim papers are protesting unanimously against the alleged restrictions on prayers in the Indore State. The Medina complains that as a result of sangathanist activities the Muslims in the Indore State are being treated as strangers. Even in small posts the number of Muslims is negligible. Since the recent disturbances congregational prayers of Muslims have been forbidden. Such is the effect of the poisonous atmosphere generated by Shuddhi and Sangathan that namaz has been prohibited in Hindu States. The reports received by us go to show that a wave of anger is surging among Muslims in India. The Mansur regrets that the Hindu State of Indore is going to inflict religious injury also on Muslims after the physical and monetary loss that they have already suffered. Congregational prayer is a necessary element of Islam, and this has been made impossible by the recent orders of the State which should be at once rescinded. The Tarjuman holds that in view of the manner in which the trouble commenced at Indore as also in view of the losses suffered by the Muslims it is downright "Changhezi" oppression to place restrictions on the Muslim right of offering prayers. Imams have been ordered not to assemble more than five Muslims for prayers and severe restrictions have been placed even on Juma prayers. Congregational prayer is a right which no Muslim can ever forego, and Government should immediately intervene in the matter. The Aziz-i-Hind attaches little importance to the opening of a council in the Bharatpur State and urges that a strong British officer should be sent there to replenish the depleted treasury and reform the administration. The state of affairs there is simply deplorable and the Resident should publish the true facts. It is a pity that the Maharaja had mosques demolished little knowing that God would visit his wrath on him by sending a devastating flood. The Tarjuman complains that the tyrannies of Shuddhi and Sangathan are widespread in the Poonch State. A nau-Muslim accused of cutting two trees surreptitiouly has been offered immunity from punishment if he comes back into the Hindu fold and every method is being tried to convert Muslims

Indians in the Colonies.

The Aj disapproves of the proposed appointment of Sir George Paddison as the official agent of India in South Africa on the ground of nationalism, says that failing Mr. Srinivas Shastri, Sir Muhammad Habibullah is the most suitable candidate and wonders why the post is not given to him. The Abhyudaya also pleads for the appointment of an Indian. The Medina says that those who are rejoicing at the South African settlement are under the hypnotic spell cast by the Government, for when all the details are finally settled the position of Indians will be found to be the same as it was before.

Communal representation.

Referring to Sir Malcolm Hailey's condemnation of the activities of those who foment and exploit communal differences the Leader writes :—The Government of the country deserve all the help people can render in exercising the demon of communalism and in restoring cordial relations between the two communities. But Government might also consider whether, whatever other causes of communal differences there might be, it is not in the nature of the system of communal electorates and communal representation in the legislatures, local bodies and public services to accentuate communal differences and whether the country can afford to give a further lease of life to the system.

The next Governor of United Provinces.

The Haqiqat agrees whole-heartedly with the view of the United Provinces Liberal League that the next Governor of these provinces should be a statesman belonging to public life and not a civilian and should preferably be an Indian and says that it is downright injustice to saddle the people of these provinces with a civilian Governor on Rs. 10,000 a month.

Ponobalia firing incident.

Angry protests against the Ponobalia firing incident continue in the Muslim Press. The Aligarh Mail writes :—The shooting, wounding and killing of Muslims at Ponobalia must send a thrill of horror and indignation in every Muslim heart. That twenty Muslims should be shot dead and forty wounded merely to provide victims to official arrogance and false sense of prestige is a conclusive proof of the incontrovertible fact that with all the progress of democracy medieval tyranny is not yet dead. Hindus preponderatingly man the service of the Associated Press of India. It is but natural that they should send out from their respective places of reporting messages which are favourable to their own community. The correspondent at Ponobalia has absolved the Hindus and the authorities of every thing sinful and criminal and has placed all the burden of sin and crime on the heads of the damned rogues, ruffians and rascals, the Musalmans, who are called "bullies" in order to produce bullies among Hindus. The author of the message has tacitly made a scapegoat of the Ponobalia Muslims. To the inward joy of the sangathanists the scapegoat has been led to the shambles of autocratic officialdom and there shot and killed in the most up-to-date fashion of modern butchers. The heartless manner in which Muslims have been mercilessly shot and killed must boil the blood in our veins and invoke our righteous indignation. The blood of the targets of official shots and shells at Ponobalia is crying out for revenge. We do not ask anybody to take revenge, but we do ask the law to wreak it on no other than the author of the Ponobalia tragedy. The Aj approves of the action of the district magistrate at Ponobalia and says that unlike the district magistrate of Allahabad, he did not show weakness but faced the danger and discharged the duty of a ruler. The authorities of other places also should similarly protect the rights of the people and should not be cowed down by the threats of rowdies. The attitude of Sir Abdur Rahim in connexion with the incident is deplorable. An inquiry should, however, be held to find out whether peace could not have been restored by a smaller number of bullets being fired and if there was a mistake the official responsible for it should be punished. The Pratap appreciates the change in the attitude of officials towards the religious rights of the Hindus, but condemns the manner in which firing was resorted to. It says: Even if it be admitted that the Muslims were in the wrong they could surely be dispersed by sowars with batons. Only fourteen bullets were ordered to be fired but actually thirty-three bullets were fired. Why? It is said that orders could not be heard on account of noise. Fie upon such orders. The practice of holding human life cheap has become current in our country. This ought to be stopped. What has been done to Muslims today can also be done to Hindus tomorrow. The Hamdam contends that the attitude of the Muslim crowd was not menacing and that not even ordinary precautions were taken before ordering fire. Blank shots were not fired and the bullets were aimed at the head and chest instead of at the legs. The matter has assumed a national importance. The Medina says that Indian Muslims everywhere are in difficulty and trouble. What, it exclaims, are the Nadiri laws of the Government, the tyrannical mentality of the constituted courts, the Pharaoh-like officials and whites, the bigotry of the compatriots, the trials of strength of shuddhi and sangathan, the rising waves of hatred and contempt and the fiery and discord-breeding anti-Muslim utterances of Moonje and Malaviya! They are a general massacre ground for the indigent and disunited Muslims and a place of trial for their souls and lives. If the events of a week are taken it will be found that owing to the laws and magical manipulations of Government and the rising aspirations of the Hindu neighbours about one thousand Muslims have been sacrificed at the altar of death, dishonour, disgrace and disrepute. At Bahadurganj the Muslims lost lives and property at the hands of the Hindu tyrants, in a tahsil in Lucknow a Hindu numbardar practised excesses on Muslims, at Rewari the Nagarkirtan party raised a hubbub before a mosque just at prayer time, at Pabna the special magistrate sentenced 196 Muslims to rigorous imprisonment for two years, at Rawalpindi 50 Muslims have been consigned to the rigours of jail life, at Indore congregational prayers have been banned, many Muslims have been wounded owing to the irresponsible and autocratic attitude of the Hindu magistrate, any number of Muslims have been thrust into jail along with Mr. Abdul Ghani and the honour of Muslims on the public highways is now in the hands of Hindu sangathanists and now this last and powerful stroke has fallen on Bengal Muslims. Why has all this happened? Because the justice of Government is one-sided. The Hindu magistrate, Gurkha soldiers and the police fired full thirty-three rounds, which was not done even by Dyer and that also against 500 unarmed Muslims who had collected only to protect their mosque from insult. When the Muslims had not taken the offensive, why were they fired at and specially in the head. More blood has been shed than in the Jallianwala Bagh but all are silent because the sufferers this time were only Muslims. The blood of Englishmen, Hindus and Sikhs is precious but not so that of Muslims. It is water and that also rain water, of no worth and unwanted and can be shed without necessity. But O! clouds of the rain of mercy, you are seeing. Go and take these corpses writhing in blood to the Court of the True Avenger and say:—Paganism is laughing, Dost Thou feel or not? Hast Thou any regard for Thy unitarianism. The Tarjuman says that Muslims cannot remain silent over the firing at Ponobalia, the oppression at Indore and the rioting at Bahadurganj. It is clear that they are now on the defensive against the Hindus, but it is strange that it is they who are visited with punishment. The Sada-i-Muslim inquires how long the officials of the British Government will continue to dye their hands with the blood of Muslims. The time has now come when both Hindus and Muslims should ponder how long officials will have freedom to rain bullets in this fashion on crowds.

Political propaganda.

Referring to Mr. Saklatwala's open letter to Mr. Gandhi the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Mr. Saklatwala is at his strongest in attacking the supposed talismanic virtues of the charkha as an economic factor and at his weakest in his attack on the personality of Mahatma Gandhi. All the same we welcome Mr. Saklatwala's criticisms as they are honest, virile, fresh and without malice and as they will serve to redirect and focus the attention on Gandhi's programme. In the course of a leading article the Bharat Dharma dwells at some length on the state of affairs in England in the seventeenth century, and remarks that the British people had themselves to resort to non-cooperation, passive resistance, civil disobedience, and strikes etc. in order to win liberty. But it should not be forgotten that they did not ignore Parliament. Similarly the leaders of India should in their fight for Swaraj make use of the legislative councils for what they are worth. That is the lesson that the history of England teaches us. The paper lays stress on the need of a tremendous amount of effort being put forth by Indians in their struggle for Swaraj, for in the case of India there is no natural bond of sympathy between the rulers and the ruled who do not belong to the same nationality. The Abhyudaya publishes a lengthy article by one S. Khuda Baksh who says that the British police is entirely responsible for all the ill-treatment that is meted out to Indians at Pondicherry. He asserts that the Madras police concocts stories in regard to them simply to justify its existence and observes that if the Government would but make inquiry it would find the allegations to be true. Referring to reports of the anti-British intrigues of the Bolsheviks, the Najat says that the situation on the north-western and north-eastern frontiers is not free from danger. Afghanistan and China will prove decisive factors in them but it is a pity that the attitude of both is doubtful and the news of the immediate summons of the Afghan envoy at Delhi to Kabul and the visit of the British Ambassador at Kabul to England is disquieting. Anyway in view of these circumstances it can be said that a conflict between British capitalism and Bolshevik democratic teachings is inevitable whether it occurs on the Indian or Chinese frontier or elsewhere. It is clear that the Bolsheviks are adopting against the British the very methods employed about fifteen years ago by Germany to humiliate the English and if the British are obsessed by the Bolshevik nightmare they are not far wrong.

The Legislative Assembly.

Referring to the passing of the motion of Mr. Jayakar regarding the reduction of the demand for the Executive Council to one rupee the Aj writes:—We are sick of these motions and speeches. Since the Assembly has passed the motions regarding the protection of British steel and exchange ratio all its work appears to us to be insincere. Mr. Jayakar seceded from the Swaraj party simply because he wanted to work the reforms and yet he moved the motion for the reduction of the demand for the Executive Council knowing full well that it was bound to be restored. This shows that such motions are only intended to delude the people. It would be much better if lovers of reforms openly joined the bureaucracy. This would at least impart a tone of reality to our public life. In another article the paper says that the doings of the Legislative Assembly which so far used to cause only grief have now become utterly disgusting. So far the bureaucracy could not get the support of elected members in its autocratic legislation but now the passing of the Steel Protection and Currency Bills has shown what shameful and harmful example some of these elected members have placed before the country. The communal venom introduced into the Assembly since the last election has relentlessly trampled upon the national interests and has only benefited the bureaucracy. The so-called leaders alone are responsible for such a deplorable degradation of political agitation.

The United Provinces Budget.

Referring to the passing of the demand for furniture for Government Houses in the Provincial Legislative Council the Aj writes:—They do not care if the people famish but it is necessary that the burden of cultivators should be increased in the interest of foreign manufacturers and officials and Rs. 18,000 should be spent to purchase new furniture for the use of the new Governor. This is what provincial autonomy means. This is how communal interests are protected and the reforms are worked. This decision to spend Rs. 18,000 for new furniture for Government Houses, specially at a time when the provincial exchequer is empty, when the unproductive debt has awfully increased and when the province is badly affected by scarcity shows what gulf exists between the people and their representatives. The Surya says that the tour expenses of the Governor, Executive Councillors and Ministers and expenses of the Governor's household should not be so heavy. Whereas large sums of money are going to be lavishly spent on the new police buildings, it is a pity that the pruning knife of economy should have been so mercilessly applied to the Education department in which a total reduction of Rs. 1,03,000 has been made in the grants for primary, secondary and higher education.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Anand gives a short sketch of the life of Muhammad Bin Kasim, the first Muslim invader of India and says that as Khwaja Hasan Nizami is making elaborate arrangements for the celebration of his anniversary the Hindus should also celebrate the anniversary of Sivaji, Ranjit Singh, Hari Singh, Rana Pratap and Guru Govind Singh, the mere mention of whose names brings the dead to life. Muhammad Bin Kasim, Muhammad Ghori and Mahmud Ghazni are nothing in comparison with these great personages. The Awaz-i-Muslim says that the Shahid number of the Arya Musafir (Agra) published by Kali Charan Sharma, editor, contains articles offensive to the sentiments of Muslims and it is feared that it may lead to Hindu-Muslim tension and disorder. It strongly appeals to the United Provinces Government to keep the atmosphere of the country peaceful by scotching this mischief. The Aiena has little faith in the protestations of high caste Hindus to treat their depressed brethren as equals and cites the speech of the president of the Adi Hindu conference in support of its view. It says that the speech clearly shows that this depressed classes movement is inspired by selfish motives and Muslims have every right to object to it. If Hindus were not desirous of crushing Muslims by these means the latter would not have objected to a work of purely social reform.

Indian States.

The Hamdam says that the attitude adopted by the Indore State officials towards Muslims is so disquieting that if it is not soon changed Muslims would never be able to live there as true Muslims. The banning of congregational prayers is an unprecedented event and all Muslim associations should be prepared to co-operate in this affair. The Sada-i-Muslim holds the Agent to the Governor General alone to be responsible for what is happening in Indore as he is ruling the state. The arrested Muslims have not got the services of counsel and are being treated with barbarity in prison. Fresh arrests are being constantly made and false statements are being forced out of prisoners. The protests of the Muslims have so far proved unavailing and the police and other state-officials are all Hindus. Indian Muslims should help their brethren in Indore and the Government of India should publish a communique early giving the true facts with a view to allay Muslim unrest. The plague of communal strife has now spread to the Indian states also and every Indian should try to eradicate it The Aiena writes in a similar strain.

The U. P. Ministry.

One Syed Sakhawat Husain, journalist, Bijnor, writing in the Haqiqat says that the present ministry has been persistently assailed with threats of dissolution ever since Mr. Chintamani's entry into the Council. Beyond the vague charge of incapacity to support which no facts have been furnished, no charge has been brought home to the present ministers. The present ministers have always been popular and have done their duty well and it seems that it is sheer jealousy which inspires the zeal of Mr. Chintamani's supporters in discrediting them. In fact the record of the present ministers is better than that of Messrs. Chintamani and Jagat Narain. In spite of his admitted capacity and sound judgement people have generally begun to suspect that Mr. Chintamani is inspired by personal selfishness and love of power in his present course in the Council.

Music before mosques.

Commenting on Mr. Mohammad Yakub's statement in the Assembly that Islam contains no injunction for the stoppage of music before mosques, the Abhyudaya refers Sir Alexander Muddiman to his own statement that the Muslim demand for the stoppage of music before mosques was old and says that the Muslims are insisting on this demand simply because the Government is supporting them. They realize that the Government has nothing to do with mosques and that its only object in doing so is to keep the Hindus and Muslims at loggerheads, but even then they think that there is no harm in this inasmuch as it would only enhance their power and prestige and suppress the Hindus. It is to be seen what the Government says in regard to this demand now that a staunch member of the Muslim League has made such a statement.

Legislative Council's session at Naini Tal.

The Abhyudaya regrets that although ever since the birth of the Congress public opinion has been opposed to hill exodus Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, the leader of the Congress party, urged that the council session should also be held at Naini Tal every year. His arguments were the same as those always advanced by officials. Mr. Pant should remember that the High Court is never closed in the summer season. When the judges and vakils, who admittedly do more brain work, are not affected by the heat, what need is there for the members of the council, who are representatives of the public and have been born in this very climate to go to hills?

Indian Budget.

Commenting on the Indian Budget the Bharat Jiwan says that only such taxes have been abolished as do not affect the people. Sir Basil's argument that the income accruing from the 18d. ratio would be devoted to beneficial departments is a mere trick. We would have congratulated the Finance Member if income had been increased by imposing duty on foreign piece goods and expenditure on the army had been reduced and the 16d. ratio adopted.

Military Policy of Government.

Referring to the "comprehensive indictment of the utterly indefensible military policy of Government which Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru made in his impressive speech in the Assembly" the Leader writes:—The military policy of Government is utterly at variance with its unctuous professions and proclaims nothing but the insincerity and the hollowness of the claim that the goal of British policy is to lead India to self-government as quickly as possible. The whole system of army organization, from the national point of view, is extravagant, wasteful and iniquitous.

Duty on newsprint.

Referring to the cut moved by Colonel Crawford in the Legislative Assembly to protest against the recent ruling as to the assessment of duty on imported paper the Leader writes:—As it is, the duty of 15 per cent. on newsprint is high enough, for it is levied, so far as we are aware, on an assumed market price which is appreciably higher than the invoice price. Now it seems that a greater piece of injustice is going to be perpetrated against Indian newspapers, the vast majority of which manage to live with difficulty. The last word does not and ought not to rest with their expert advisers, however trained they may be. If there is a flaw anywhere which defeats the intention of the Legislature and threatens to cause hardship to the users of newsprint it ought to be removed without loss of time.

The next Governor of United Provinces.

The Aziz-i-Hind suspects that the agitation got up by the Liberal Association in regard to the next Governor of the United Provinces is designed to secure the gubernatorial gaddi of these provinces for Sir Atul Chandra Chatterji and says that in view of the vitiated atmosphere here at present it will be highly undesirable to get an Indian as Governor. It would be best to appoint a European civilian. Sir Sam O'Donnell is in every way fitted for this office and there seems no reason why his claims should be ignored. Failing him, the post should go to Sir Alexander Muddiman.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina urges that in the case of Haj pilgrims children below three should be exempted from payment of fare and children up to eleven years of age should be required to pay only half fare. The Government cannot rehabilitate its reputation for justice unless it does away with this discrimination between Haj pilgrims and passengers bound for Europe.

Communal representation.

There is considerable divergence of opinion regarding the decision of the informal conference of Muslim leaders at Delhi on the subject of communal electorates. The Leader writes:—The acceptance of the principle of joint electorates by the informal conference is evidence of the nationalist outlook of those who took part in it and they deserve to be congratulated on it. The ideal electorates would be general territorial electorates without any reservation of seats for any community. But in the present stage the best that one can hope for is the substitution of joint for separate electorates with reservation of seats. We believe that the former will so improve the relations of the two great communities that the next step in the electoral reform would be the abolition of joint electorates and the establishment of a fully democratic system with perfect freedom to the electors to choose whomsoever they like to represent them irrespective of his creed or religion. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—By agreeing to abandon communal electorates and accepting joint electorates, with certain safeguards, Muslim leaders have made history. That important leaders, members of the legislative bodies elected by Muslims, should have come to this conclusion is highly significant. If the Muslims had stood adamantine, and not made any concession, they would have laid themselves open for condemnation. The disease required a remedy. They have courageously resolved to find it. On the side of the Hindus, with the experience of the Lucknow Pact and the very unfortunate cleavage between the two communities resultant from that, there is likely to be very careful examination of the Muslim safeguards. But Hindus are the majority, and it lies with the stronger always to make concessions, and generous concessions, to the weak. The Abhyudaya is glad to note that the Muslim leaders are ready to accept the principle of mixed electorates, but urges them to examine fully the conditions they propose to offer to the Hindus and see that they do not prove unacceptable to the latter. The Muslims probably want the extension of the Reforms to the Frontier and representation according to their numbers in the Punjab, Bengal and Sindh to ensure their domination in all the three frontiers of the country, but they should bear in mind that the Hindus, in view of their Rawalpindi and Kohat experiences, will naturally feel suspicious over this demand and will not like it. Moreover, though they are in a minority according to their numbers in these three provinces they are not so unimportant from the standpoint of education and wealth. The Hamdam, while doubtful of the wisdom of the decision of the conference, holds that it is very necessary that Sindh should be made a separate province and that the Reforms should be extended to Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier Province. The regard for justice of the Muslims is apparent from their willingness to concede to the Hindu minority in these three provinces the same privileges that have been allowed to the Muslim minority in other provinces. It is only in Bengal and the Punjab that they want representation on a population basis as under the present ratio they are unable to safeguard their interests. The Haqiqat urges that a more representative gathering of Muslims than the one that met at Delhi should consider the question of Hindu-Muslim settlement and the terms should be ratified by both the Muslim League and the National Congress. The Nayar-i-Azam supports the Zamindar's view that Government should reserve a certain proportion of posts of clerks and officers in every department for Muslims, and urges some member of the United Provinces Legislative Council to put questions about the number of Muslim clerks and officers in various departments in these provinces.

Ponobalia firing incident.

The Muslim Press continues to protest vehemently against the Ponobalia firing incident. The Aligarh Mail characterizes the message of the Associated Press regarding this affair as a tissue of lies and half-truths and a lying propaganda against the victimized Muslims and says :—If, however, the Associated Press has misrepresented the Muslims, much more the statement of Mr. Blandy and the communiqué of the Bengal Government have done the same injustice. Both the communications have tried to white-wash the indelible blot on Mr. Blandy of massacring in a sense in cold blood the poor Ponobalia Muslims. That without inflicting a scratch on the body of a public servant or a Hindu they have been shot and killed is the most grotesque and shocking example of official irresponsibility and high-handedness. It is evident that Mr. Blandy has played with the lives of the Ponobalia Muslims like a child. In the course of an impassioned editorial the Medina writes :—This is the second general massacre in India after the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. Far from deploring the incident Hindu papers and leaders are rejoicing over the fact that a Hindu Magistrate has revived the memory of Nadir and Chengez. Not only is the action of the mad and tyrannical magistrate being commended, but the Muslims as a community are being branded as tyrants and barbarous. The communiqué of the Bengal Government is self-contradictory, is nothing but an attempt at white-washing and betrays a partisan spirit. We do not think that any other magistrate or Government servant ever disgraced "law and order" to such an extent. The Mansur voices the pain and grief caused among Muslims by the firing at Ponobalia, and says that it appears that Muslim blood is now very cheap in the eyes of Government and it is regarded as a matter of no consequence by the powers-that-be to take away the lives of unarmed men. The Muslims were fired at even though they had wounded no Hindu or policeman. The procession was cruelly allowed to pass even before the wounded and killed Muslims had been removed, and this shows the feelings by which the authorities were inspired. In fact, such a tragedy under a civilized Government amounts to a monstrous crime and Muslims would not be satisfied until an inquiry is made through a commission and the guilty are punished. The Sadaqat writes :—The massacre at Ponobalia shows that human blood is at a heavy discount in the English Government as its officials very light-heartedly fire on unarmed crowds on the slightest pretext. The terrible tragedy at Ponobalia recalls memories of the Jallianwala Bagh, and the district magistrate has proved himself a veritable General Dyer. We do not seek to justify the Muslim attitude, but question whether it was the duty of the magistrate to make human blood flow like water to safeguard the rights of a community? Even the magistrate's statement itself does not justify his Dyerian order.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Leader writes : —The appeal issued by the "Fellowship" organization which has been formed in Calcutta, although not the first of its kind, deserves the support of all well-wishers of the country and all God-fearing and truly religious men . . . The bulk of the Hindus are unaffected by the spirit of fanaticism or intolerance. But when they find, as in Bengal, their temples desecrated, their idols destroyed, their religious processions being violently attacked not in one but in hundreds of places, properties looted and other atrocities being perpetrated by the fanatical followers of a religion which has been declared to be the religion of peace, is it surprising that the spirit of intolerance has begun to spread among the Hindus? This is making the position more complicated. A gratuitous and ruinous conflict of cultures and faiths has been precipitated by narrow-minded bigots who have forgotten the essential principles of religion and who are bringing disgrace on this country. We do not know whether the appeal for unity of the distinguished signatories will make them pause, for similar appeals before this have fallen flat on them. The Hindi Kesari contends that the riots at Kulkathi (Barisal), Indore, and Bombay have made it clear that Muslim maulvis are at the bottom of all the mischief. If Government wants to eradicate communal strife it should take effective steps to uproot it, but what can be expected of the Government when it imposes punitive police on Patuakhali but exempts Muslims even from paying its cost. Al Khalil regrets that Hindu-Muslim tension is becoming widespread day by day, and, referring to the Ponobalia incident, warns Hindus that they should not dream of annihilating Muslims in India. Here unlike Spain the Muslims are allied with Government and with tanzim their losses in communal riots will not be as severe as heretofore. The Mashriq publishes the statement of Mr. Shah Badre Alam, M.L.C., in which he says that the Hindu attack at Bahadurganj was premeditated as the Hindus being in a minority locally had summoned their co-religicnists from neighbouring villages and had planted flags for their guidance. Even the looms of the weavers were broken and buried valuables were dug out. There is no sign of Hindu houses having been looted. The rumours about the posting of Hindu officers and the release of arrested Hindus on bail has encouraged the Hindus. Commenting on the above the paper wonders why murderers and dacoits have been let off on bail, and says that the European magistrate who is coming to try the riot case should not only hold charge of the tahsil, but should also be made Collector of Ghazipur when the present Collector goes. The Collectors of the eastern districts should be all Europeans.

Political propaganda.

The Abhyudaya refers to Major Graham Pole's article urging the British Government to adopt the same sympathetic attitude towards India as it has done towards China, and observes :—The sympathy which is being shown to China at the present juncture is due to the fact that China is strong and is ready to marshal her armies against all aggressors and also because Britain wants to prevent alliance between her and Russia. The Reforms of 1919 were not granted to India out of love for justice but with a view to win her support at a critical juncture. Major Graham Pole should rest assured that when England is in trouble and stands in need of India's help or when India's position becomes the same as that of China to-day England will show the same generosity to her as she is displaying towards the colonies. The Aj says that, although India has certainly gained morally and intellectually by her connexion with Britain, she has suffered heavily in respect of material advantages and found the door to progress closed. If England will accept India's claim to recuperation and unrestricted scope for advancement it will be beneficial both to Englishmen and Indians alike; otherwise the cant of whiteman's burden and God-given trust, etc., can only inflict pain on the Indian heart. The paper is utterly dissatisfied with Mr. Gandhi's justification of the Bardoli decision, impugned by Mr. Saklatwala in his open letter to the former, and contends that it was only after this decision that the bureaucracy began to gain in strength and treat public opinion with contempt. Now the bureaucracy has become so emboldened by dissensions among the political parties and by the readiness of political leaders to kotow to it that it openly undertakes legislation to protect British industries and raise the exchange rate at the cost of the Indian agriculturist to the benefit of foreign officials and manufacturers. All this is the outcome of the Bardoli decision. Mahatma Gandhi may well commend this decision, but all the subsequent events tell a different tale. The Bardoli decision will continue to proclaim the failure of the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi and time alone will prove whether this failure is a temporary or a permanent one. Commenting on the passage of the 18*d.* ratio Pt. Manohar Pant, writing in the Shakti, says :—This would mean the destruction of Indian industries and encouragement of the foreign and specially the British ones. Indian bureaucracy is very clever. While on the one hand it is posing as the well-wisher of the public by appointing the Agricultural Commission on the other it is pursuing such a reprehensible policy.

Indian States.

Muslim feeling continues to be exercised over the restrictions on congregational prayers in Indore. The Rohilkhand Gazette says that the restrictions on congregational prayers in mosques in Indore are an open attack on Islam and will inflame the feelings of Muslims throughout the world. Muslim religious zeal is well known, and the Viceroy should interfere in the matter. The Haq says that Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang's telegraphic messages about the condition of Indore Muslims are very heart-rending and show that ever since the abdication of the late Maharaja communal relations have become very strained. The communal riot has so worsened the situation that Muslims are being discharged from the police and military departments. Numbers of respectable Muslims have been arrested and the inquiry is mostly in the hands of Hindus. The Hamdam regrets that the sangathanist Hindus and Aryas have now gained the upper hand in the Indore State and are harassing Muslims in every way. The Arya procession passed the mosque there three times with music in order to incite the Muslims. Such is the mentality of our Hindu brethren which is forging the chains of India's slavery.—There has been a crop of articles this week in the Urdu press protesting against the alleged growing Europeanization of the services in the Hyderabad State in spite of the Nizam's readiness to initiate reforms.—The Farishta says that the changes in the administration of the Bharatpur State cannot mend matters unless the ruler shakes off his personal weaknesses. The State is being visited by God's wrath. Sometimes the murder of the innocent is revealed. Sometimes ancient State jewels are offered for sale. Sometimes prostitutes are regarded as a means of amusement. The State administration can be reformed only if Government takes over complete charge and the demolished mosques are rebuilt. One Raj Kumar, writing in the Pratap appeals to the Government of India and the Kshattriya raises of Rajputana to abolish slavery prevailing in the "Darogha" community in the states there and says that men and women of this community have to lead very miserable lives on account of this evil. They are ill-treated by their masters and the private parts of their women are sometimes branded with hot iron.

Indian Budget.

Commenting on the Indian and provincial budgets the Hitaishi says:—These two budgets reveal the helplessness of Indians. Recommendations of the Inchcape Committee to curtail expenditure on administration have not been accepted, but those of the Lee Commission to increase the emoluments of high officials have been fully carried out. The sole object of saddling India with the huge military expenditure is to safeguard the interests of the British Empire. The proposed expenditure of ten lakhs over airships with the object of encouraging the British airship industry at a time when nearly half the Indians are starving shows that India is not for Indians. The action of the provincial Government in raising a loan of 8 crores of rupees without the sanction of the Council reflects on the utility of the Reforms. Comparing Englishmen to the plum which is outwardly soft but inwardly hard the Bharat Dharma says that in framing the budget Sir Basil Blackett has exhibited his plum-like attributes. Out of 125 crores and a quarter 55 crores will be spent over the army and the rest will be distributed over all other departments. The reason why military expenditure has not been curtailed is that the Government needs white troops for maintaining its prestige in India and black for suppressing freedom-loving countries like China. Some taxes like the duty on the import of motor cars and the export of tea have no doubt been reduced, but in doing so the bureaucracy has thought of benefiting its own community. Its remission of provincial contributions is merely a sop to provincial Governments. It is in these ways that while the Government serves its own ends it professes to act in the name of generosity and public good.

Music before mosques.

The Abhyudaya says:—A perusal of the reply given by the Government to Mr. Chintamani's questions in connexion with the playing of music before mosques at Allahabad shows that there are no records of the inquiry made by the Commissioner. The Government is not even prepared to say whether the inquiry was formal or informal. If the Commissioner really made an inquiry why should it be kept confidential, and if the Government's case is strong why does it hesitate to publish the report? The secrecy shows that there is surely something rotten in the state of Denmark. If the Commissioner's inquiry shows that music was never played before mosques at Allahabad, or that the music accompanying the processions was ever stopped at the time of namaz either those who gave evidence spoke a lie or the Commissioner misconstrued what they said. The Government ought to conduct an open inquiry summoning Hindus, Muslims, as well as Christians as witnesses. In a subsequent article the paper extols the action of the Hindus of Shahabad (Punjab) in taking out their Holi procession without obtaining a licence from the police and says:—In our opinion there is no need to take a licence from anybody in connexion with the processions. All that is necessary is to inform the police in order to enable it to make the necessary arrangements for the passage of processions. This is also the intention of the law, but the epidemic of licences is spreading all over the country and the Government is depriving the public of its ordinary rights by demanding licences on the plea of police arrangements. To-day the sword of licence is not only putting an end to Hindu festivals and processions, but is also preventing the Hindus from passing on roads accompanied by their kith and kin and in the place where the Kotwal is a Muslim and unfortunately a favourite of the Collector, the Commissioner and the Deputy Inspector-General of Police the stopping of Hindu processions has become the order of the day.

New Delhi.

Referring to the falling of a brick near the Commander-in-Chief in the Legislative Assembly at New Delhi the Aj says :—This is New Delhi ! This is the achievement of highly-paid European architects ! Surely this shows that the Public Works Department is the Public waste department. Will this building which has cost crores of rupees but has proved to be so weak proclaim the stability of British rule in the country ? It would be better if the bureaucracy even now refrained from wasting money of the poor tax-payers over buildings, for the sighs of the poor cannot but have their effect on these buildings. The Surya observes :—We have seen one specimen of the efficiency of British engineering in the Back Bay scheme, this is another. Such is the condition of the building built for the representatives of the people by spending crores of rupees of the poor Indians and opened by the Viceroy himself ! In Benares, Delhi, and elsewhere there are numerous edifices constructed by Indian engineers which have been standing intact for thousands of years.

Indian Navy.

The Aj protests against the proposed establishment of an Indian Navy and says :—India is already groaning under the burden of military expenditure, and now she is to be saddled with naval expenditure, too. It is sought to be made out that the possession of a navy will add to the glory of this country, but this is all camouflage. The real intention is to meet imperial needs at the expense of India and enable Britain to make a make-believe reduction in naval armaments. This navy, like India's army, will be utilized in strangling her neighbours. Indians will thus lose money and get discredit in the bargain. The Hamdam refers to the solicitude of British statesmen for the expansion of their naval power in the East and to the project for the establishment of a naval base at Singapore at a colossal cost and says that the proposal for an Indian navy is also part of this scheme. In view of Government's ways many Indians suspect that this navy will be used less to defend the coasts of their country and more to further British imperialistic designs. The political history of the world records no more ridiculous anomaly than that the members of the Council of State and the Assembly should have no voice in the control of the Indian navy and that its dispositions should be at the sweet will of the Viceroy alone, unaided even by his council.

Telegraph department.

The Aj objects to the practice of sending telegrams by post and urges that if telegrams cannot be despatched for any reason they should be refused or if sent by post the charges for them should be refunded. In another article the paper refers to some vagaries committed by the Telegraph department in the matter of intercepting telegrams, and urges that only those officials who can distinguish between what is objectionable and what is not should be authorized to exercise this power. The authority who intercepts telegrams should at once inform their senders of the fact pointing out the words and sentences held to be objectionable so that further action in the matter may be taken by the latter.

The United Provinces Legislative Council.

Referring to the projected formation of a party in the United Provinces Council containing some zamindars and Muslim members, also under the leadership of Mr. Chintamani, the Aziz-i-Hind warns Muslims that Mr. Chintamani's leadership will greatly prejudice the interests of their community and is meant only to wreck the present ministry and to wrest power from it. As some members are jealous of the present ministers and bear them personal ill-will Mr. Chintamani is being egged on. The nobility of spirit, efficiency and alacrity with which the present Ministers are discharging their duties and the advantages at present enjoyed by zamindars cannot be expected when the fire-spitting group comes into power. The paper characterizes as puerile the suggestions of Mr. Chintamani about the abolition of the posts of the Chief Secretary and Commissioners and the appointment of an Indian Aide-de-Camp or Private Secretary and advises zamindar members not to prejudice their happy relations with the officials by supporting such proposals.

The Bengal détenus.

The Aj remarks that the bureaucracy has made up its mind to continue to keep in duress the political prisoners for an indefinite period in utter disregard of public opinion. This is inevitable. When public opinion has been weakened by communalism, why should the bureaucracy not take advantage of it ? When leaders, actuated by communalism, are engaged in the task of securing crumbs for their respective communities by propitiating the bureaucracy by means of co-operation or responsive co-operation why should not the latter then grow more fearless and trample upon our personal liberty relentlessly? The official decision shows that the bureaucracy is neither afraid of the clamouring of the Legislative Assembly, nor does it care for the opinion of its mutually wrangling Indian members. Whatever it does Indians will have to accept as heavenly justice.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Having taught us to beg Lord Birkenhead seems to derive supreme satisfaction in treating us as beggars. His speech at the London Ladies' Carlton Club is a study in administrative arrogance. From the proud position that we occupied but a few years ago we have reached a stage when the Secretary of State can scarcely open his mouth without grossly insulting our intelligence . . . We can contemplate, not without indifference but with a positive sense of relief, the withdrawal of the Viceroy, English lawyers and the English civil service: the opportunities for distinction denied to us hitherto would then be open to us. We are fit to run the civil administration to-morrow: in fact, we were fit to run it day before yesterday. We are sick of the insulting platitude about co-operation and goodwill and absence of violence and menace. This is brutal exultation at our discomfiture. The more our leaders indulge in what they call co-operation the more will they have to endure this kind of gratuitous sneer.

The United Provinces Budget.

The Haqiqat complains that the most powerful blow of the retrenchment axe has been aimed at the Education department and there has been reduction of about ten lakhs in its expenditure. The reserved departments have been treated otherwise and the economies effected in them are inconsiderable. Experienced, enthusiastic and wide-awake members of the Council should try to have the reduction in the education budget made up from the remissions in Provincial contribution.

Jails in United Provinces.

The Vartman writes:—The condition of the jails of our provinces is very bad. Indian prisoners are confined like cattle and are compelled to do extremely hard labour in order to increase the income of the jail department. They cannot secure better treatment than that accorded to animals and the value of their lives decreases in jails. On the other hand, European prisoners are supplied not only with necessaries of life but luxuries also. They get the same kind of food as is used by ordinary Europeans in their homes. A European soldier receives the same food in jails as he gets in barracks. Will any member of the United Provinces Council have the courage to speak on this open partiality?

Foreign affairs.

Referring to the anti-German propaganda during the last war the Abhyudaya warns Indians not to give much credence to the news regarding the Chinese atrocities on foreigners in China. It says that as the foreigners do not want that Shanghai should go into the hands of the Chinese they are circulating these reports simply with the object of enlisting public opinion in America and England in favour of a war with China and for showing that their cause is righteous and that war has been forced on them on account of these atrocities. The Aj has written a number of articles vehemently denouncing British policy in China. It says that in view of the Foreign Secretary's reply to Diwan Chaman Lal's question in the Legislative Assembly it is nothing but international brutality to send Indian troops to Shanghai in the name of the protection of Indian life and property. It is only to satisfy imperialistic greed that our money is being wasted and the lives of our brethren are being imperilled. No condemnation is too strong of the policy of British imperialists to get their ends served in eastern countries at the cost of the credit of India. This crookedness may well secure to them temporary advantages, but ultimately it will bring Britain into disrepute in all eastern countries and nobody will trust her word and intentions any longer. The paper invites attention to the emphasis laid by Agha Uglu Ahmad in official Turkish newspapers on the inter-Asiatic importance of the struggle in China and says that the inhabitants of subject countries labour under a delusion if they think that they are to concern themselves only with their own national questions in utter disregard of the general question of the traditional conflict between the East and the West. The occidentals, in spite of their internal dissensions have combined, in violation of all international regulations and practices, to crush China for fear of their imperialistic dreams remaining unrealized by her awakening. It is to be deplored that Indians do not realize that the struggle for emancipation in China and Turkey, in Morocco and Egypt and in Iraq and Persia is but part of a similar future struggle in India and are engaged in throttling each other to the augmentation of the power of their rulers.

Communal representation.

The conditions proposed by the Muslim conference at Delhi for the establishment of joint electorates are being subjected to a searching analysis both by Muslim and Hindu papers and criticisms range from qualified approbation to unreserved condemnation. The Indian Daily Telegraph contends that the fulfilment of the proposed conditions does not rest with Hindus and says :—Surely Government have not withheld Reforms from the North-West Frontier or Baluchistan out of regard for Hindu feelings or wishes. Government have to consider their own interests and they would not be influenced by our desires or demands. To impose these conditions on Hindus as the price of their surrender of separate electorates is simply preposterous. We ask for a little more light on it. Is it mere bluff, pure camouflage or has it any substance in it? The separate electorates must go. We are prepared to make large concessions to our Muslim brethren but we cannot fetch the moon for them. All that we can say is that we will support their demands but will the bureaucracy put any value on it? We may be prepared to agree to any terms but what earthly good is there of securing our promise on matters which are the sole concern of Government? The Aj doubts if communal leaders will allow the principle of mixed electorates to be accepted. It says that even from the political standpoint Hindus will have to examine with great care the conditions laid down by Muslims. It appears impossible that the Sindh Hindus would support the creation of Sindh into a separate province. The introduction of Reforms in the North-West Frontier Province and in Baluchistan should not be resisted by Hindus but representation on the basis of population in the Punjab and Bengal will be unfair in view of the influence and financial position of the Hindus there. The utmost that can be done in these two provinces is to allow equal representation to the two communities. The Abhyudaya says that the Muslim demands in connexion with the question of joint electorates mean the sacrifice of Hindu nationalism. They show that the Muslims distrust the Hindus and want not only to protect but also to further their interests. Such being the case the Muslims should have no cause for complaint if the Hindus also think of safeguarding their interests. The Udyog commends the efforts of Indian leaders for the abolition of the system of separate representation but thinks that on account of the narrow communalism of the Muslims there is little chance of their proving successful. If the leaders really want to restore peace in the country they should infuse patriotism in the hearts of Muslims otherwise their agreement will also share the fate of the Lucknow pact. The Surya says that although the conditions laid down by Muslims are improper and are not beneficial for the Hindus they should be accepted with some modifications. The Najat says that the acceptance of joint electorates by the Delhi Muslim meeting will further the cause of Indian nationalism. It is a matter for gratification that the agreement has proved acceptable to Hindus and it is to be hoped that Government also will agree to it. The Sarfaraz says that if the Hindu leaders grasp the hand of fellowship and good-will extended by the Muslim leaders at Delhi the political atmosphere will be assuredly purified and communal tension will be considerably lessened. The Haqiqat publishes the views of a number of prominent Muslims of the United Provinces against the Delhi decision in favour of joint electorates and says that all Muslim M. L. C's., so far interviewed by its special representative, have supported separate representation. The Hamdam says that in view of the mentality displayed by Hindus in recent years the Muslim members of the United Provinces Council are quite justified in opposing joint electorates and their views merit the consideration of the leaders who met at Delhi. The Medina writes:—By their just and reasonable demands in connexion with the constitution of joint electorates the Muslims have shown that they are greater friends of India than Hindus. But it is difficult for the narrow-minded sangathanists to grasp the hand of fellowship extended by the Muslims so long as persons like Malaviyaji, Lala Lajpat Rai and Bhai Parmanand are alive whose sole aim is to wipe the Muslims out of existence. The Muslims made a great mistake in evincing a desire for uniting with the narrow-minded, bigoted and time-serving Brahmans and Kshattriyas who have been slaves for thousands of years and have in many ways tyrannized over the poor inhabitants of India and who cannot tolerate any understanding with the Muslims even for a moment, for their religion which consists in the worship of god Ganesh having the head of an elephant and of the ling (organ of generation) of the god Mahadeva leaves no room for a belief in the unity of God. If the Hindu sabhaites do not accept these demands of the Muslims let the latter also spurn all talk of unity with these blind and wretched fellows.

Ponobalia firing.

The Muslim press continues to protest against the Ponobalia firing incident. The Tarjuman characterizes the firing as an exhibition of wanton blood-lust and says that it will go down in history as a sad commentary on British justice. Muslims were slaughtered like dumb driven cattle. Will Government see its way to punish the person who proved a traitor to it by murdering its subjects. Muslims should not be silent until they get the price of the blood of the martyrs of Ponobalia. The Mansur regards the Ponobalia firing as a barbarous outrage reminiscent of the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy and says:—It is a pity that the administration is trying to whitewash the cruel crime of its local agents. The harrowing details furnished by Mr. Shahid Suhrawardy show the extent of the callousness betrayed by the authorities. The misrepresentations of the Government and the Associated Press cannot carry conviction and it is patent that the magistrate abused his special powers in firing on an inoffensive crowd. This blood-thirsty magistrate should be transferred at once and a mixed commission of inquiry should be appointed. If these Muslim demands are not acceded to the administration should be made impossible. The Bedar sarcastically remarks that history will record the Ponobalia firing as an example of British justice and regrets that though this tragedy was no whit less in seriousness than that at Jallianwala Bagh no Hindu leader has so far uttered a word in condemnation of the officials. The Jadu deplores the occurrence of the Kalkati incident so soon after the Ponobalia affair and warns Hindus not to be jubilant as even though Muslims are the sufferers in these cases, another time it might be their turn to be oppressed. Both Hindus and Muslims should join hands against the common foreign foe as he has now become bold enough to toy with human lives.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Abhyudaya opposes the appeal made by Messrs. Hanuman Prasad Poddar and Saklatwala to the Hindus to strive to secure the release of Abdul Rashid and says that it is not prepared to believe that magnanimity will produce any good effect upon Abdul Rashid or the Muslim community. Hindu history is full of such magnanimous acts but in the present days magnanimity is mistaken for weakness and gentlemanliness or simplicity for folly. The Udyog publishes a story by Girdhari in which the boy-hero, Birju, who has rescued his aunt from the hands of some Muslim hooligans, is depicted as deploring the apathy of the Hindus towards the forcible abduction of their sisters and daughters by the Muslim hooligans and asks:—What has become of the time when as a result of the dishonour of one woman the entire country was reduced to ruins and when even after killing lakhs of Kshattriyas Bhim's wrath was not appeased so long as he did not break the thigh of Duryodhana? The Arya Mitra publishes an appeal for funds by Babu Parmeshwari Sahai of Agra for helping Pandit Kali Charan Sharma's family, publishing the copies of his written statement in the case against the Vichitra Jiwan and for filing an appeal before the Privy Council and exhorts the Hindus of these provinces to respond to it. The Hamdam deplores the insistence of sangathanist leaders on playing music before mosque at prayer time and warns Hindus that by their unjustified obstinacy they are playing into the hands of the alien officials. It welcomes the "Fellowship" formed at Calcutta to combat communal conflict and hopes that its members will rise above communal prejudice. The Medina writes:—In the cases instituted in Bengal Hindus are being released everywhere and Muslims convicted. The rulers have adopted a policy of punishing the two communities by turns.

Legislative Assembly.

The proceedings of the Legislative Assembly have come in for a good deal of adverse criticism in the extremist press. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—By its vote for the restoration of the salt tax the Legislative Assembly (sic) crowns a long career of utter contradictions, purposelessness, inertia, intolerable vacillation and absolute intellectual paralysis that have been the leading characteristics of the strongest political party in it. The voting on the Finance Bill spelt a disgraceful rout of the popular party. The Aj takes strong exception to the attitude of officials in leaving their seats during Mr. Ranga Iyer's speech and says:—They did not want to listen to what popular representatives urged. They were unwilling to see how the Indian heart was vomiting blood. They did what they had already decided upon and what was likely to benefit foreigners. The budget has been passed and the grants rejected by the Assembly have been restored by the Viceroy. Never before has any parliament been so much insulted by its officials. This is only possible in India in this twentieth century. India enacts this insulting drama every year at the cost of lakhs of rupees. The newly elected Assembly has done more harm to the country in a very short time than the previous two Assemblies did during their whole term of life. This time the bureaucracy has secured a complete triumph. Legislators elected on communal tickets have thoroughly throttled nationalism. Reviewing the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and the provincial councils the Vartman says that the powers conferred upon these legislatures are merely illusory and they are therefore unable to do any real good to the people. Proceeding it remarks:—The leaders should cease to think of these councils and should turn towards the villages where lies the real power which can raise India. What is the use of testing a thing which has already been tested? Years have been spent in running after the mirage of these councils, now come to the real field of action where there is no illusion or fraud.

Indian States.

The Mansur asserts, on the authority of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang, that the Muslims of Indore are panic-stricken as the state is treating them just as a foreign conqueror treats a vanquished and oppressed people under martial law. The honour of respectable Muslims is in danger, arrests continue and many have left the city. The Muslims wanted the special tribunal to consist of a Hindu, a Muslim and a European, but it is actually constituted of two capable Hindus and a weak Muslim. There is little hope of justice in these circumstances and the Indore State should concede the reasonable Muslim demands. Muslims all over the country should help their afflicted co-religionists in Indore liberally. The Hamdam protests against telegrams from Indore about the recent riots being detained and says that this is an encouragement to the oppressive and tyrannical attitude of the state. It is the acknowledged right of the public to make inquiries and publish the true facts wherever oppression has been practised. The paper protests against the high-handedness of Government in forcing costly English officials on the Hyderabad State and warns it against the consequences of Muslim resentment. A vigorous agitation should be set up against this attitude of Government.

Muslim affairs.

The Haqiqat regrets that owing to his continued association with Government as Home Member the Maharaja of Mahmudabad has lost touch with public opinion and has been wrongly advocating British interference in Hedjaz affairs. The recent Mahmudabad deputation to the Viceroy was unrepresentative in character and contained not a single independent nationalist Muslim. Returning to the subject in a subsequent issue the paper characterizes the Mahmudabad deputation as another move to secure British interference in Hedjaz affairs. It is a fact established by experience during the last fifteen or twenty years that British imperial policy is guided not by Muslim sentiment but by its own interests and so the address presented by the Mahmudabad deputation may at any time be utilized to justify British interference in the Hedjaz and the responsibility for this would rest on the Maharaja Saheb and his short-sighted friends. The Mahmudabad deputation has blundered in approaching the British Government in regard to Hedjaz affairs without even consulting public opinion.

Case of Kharag Bahadur.

Papers of all shades of opinion pay glowing tributes to the chivalry evinced by Kharag Bahadur and strongly support the appeal for the exercise of the royal prerogative in his case. The Pioneer writes:—Mr. Moberly's reply to the deputation of ladies who made representation to him on the sentence inflicted on Kharag Bahadur Singh seemed to be lacking in force, if the report does not do him an injustice. The exercise of the prerogative of mercy does not connote a reversal of a judge's decision and there is no limit either to the time or to the manner in which it takes effect. A public champion cannot be allowed the use of the knife as a means of private vengeance. Still the ladies in Calcutta put forward a strong case for mitigation of the sentence and it is astonishing that Mr. Moberly, although sympathetic, should have been misled in his interpretation of procedure. The Leader also expresses a similar view and urges that the Royal prerogative is unrestricted by law. The Himalayan Times writes:—Sjt. Kharag Bahadur, a youth of super-sensitive nature, and gifted with a high sense of racial patriotism, chivalry and self-sacrifice, as he was, his dignified code of morality could not permit perpetuation of the standing disgrace heaped upon the Gurkha nation by an unscrupulous and relentless gang of social parasites. Although taking the law into one's own hands is neither permissible nor advisable, yet the protection of the honour and chastity of our mothers, sisters and daughters is as much as, if not more, than our duty in obeying the various sections of the Indian Penal Code.

Jail reforms.

The Hamdam observes that the strong and unanimous criticism of jail administration in the United Provinces Council shows that it needs further reforms and hopes that the authorities will not delay those reforms at least which do not involve extra expenditure but only need stricter supervision on the part of the higher officials and a more honest and sympathetic attitude on the part of their subordinates.

Foreign affairs.

Criticizing British policy in China the Leader writes:—The British Government now seems to be on the war-path. The moral issues are being clouded by the spirit of militarism which is asserting itself and the stage is being set for a sanguinary conflict between nationalist China and the forces of exploitation and reaction both within and without. The folly of force in dealing with a militant nationalist movement is going to be repeated. If China emerges successful out of the impending ordeal of fire and sword it will bring the era of international peace nearer and further discredit the creed of unrighteous imperialism. The Aj remarks that the evacuation of the Yangtse valley, the strengthening of the Shanghai defence by Englishmen and the publication of exaggerated accounts of Chinese atrocities in the British and American press constitute a very ominous augury inasmuch as they show that public opinion in Britain, America and the British Colonies is being won over in favour of war. If Britain really declares war the situation will become very critical. Indian public opinion will not be able to tolerate the suppression of Chinese nationalism and the Indian loyalty to the British Crown will be put to a very serious strain. In view of such dangerous consequences British authorities will be well advised not to tread this uncertain and thorny path, which is sure to lead to a fresh world conflagration. Referring to the Chinese struggle for independence the Anand exhorts the British Government to establish responsible democratic government in India and impart military education to the people as a safeguard against a situation like that in China or an invasion by the Chinese of Indian frontiers in the course of war with the British. The Haqiqat says that the incidents at Shanghai and Nanking show that Europeans will have to yield up their special rights in China. As Russia is secretly backing China any interference by the European powers will lead to a terrible conflagration and many Asiatic powers also might become involved in it and Bolshevism might overspread every Asiatic country. It is therefore the bounden duty of every well-wisher of Asiatic nations to see that hostilities do not break out in China and every question is settled by negotiation.

The Sandhurst Committee's report.

The recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee have so far been generally received with satisfaction by Indian papers. The Pioneer writes:—The present shortage of British officers is engaging the anxious attention of the military authorities. The publication of the Sandhurst Committee report is not likely to diminish that anxiety. The atmosphere of political apologetics is discernible on many pages of the report. The possible British recruit, already deterred by doubts concerning the material attractiveness of the Indian Service, will find his doubts enhanced. While the committee are mainly concerned with supplying a theoretical answer to a political question, the Government of India and the military authorities in attempting to give effect thereto will not be relieved for an instant of their practical duty of preserving inviolate the defence of India and her position as an integral part of the British Empire. Hence arise issues far too big to be handled by the Government of India alone. The Leader writes:—The summary of the recommendations of the Skeen Committee will be read with general satisfaction in the country. If the recommendations are accepted and given effect to in a spirit of courageous statesmanship there would be greater confidence in the sincerity of British professions in the matter of the declared policy of leading India to the goal of self-government and the military policy would be brought more or less into line with the civil policy . . . But the country is quite familiar with the dilatory tactics that have been adopted in putting off indefinitely decisions in matters which affect the reality of British power. We are not quite sure if the labours of the committee will not after all be wasted along with the Indian tax-payers' money spent upon its inquiry and whether after the mountain is once more in labour even the proverbial mouse will come out. Let it be recognized in time that a helpless India can only be a source of weakness to the Empire in the hour of crisis and that a strong, contented and grateful India will always be the bulwark of the Empire. In a subsequent issue, replying to the criticisms of Anglo-Indian papers of the recommendations of the committee the paper writes :—The report is not the handiwork of "agitators" who have no practical knowledge of military problems. A perusal of the report will show that the committee have throughout accepted and emphasized the necessity of maintaining the existing standard of efficiency and it cannot be urged with fairness by the critics of the recommendations that they involve a lowering of the standard. Their acceptance would show that the Government which has been so far playing with the question of Indianization, wants to treat it in a serious spirit. Indian opinion is not generally satisfied with the rate of progress suggested, but even if the cautious scheme is accepted it will mark a notable improvement in the desired direction on the existing extremely unsatisfactory position. The complaint that the right type of candidates is not forthcoming will, we hope, be removed with the improved prospects which the acceptance of the recommendations will offer. The Aj writes :—There is no doubt that British officers will be required for the Indian Army for a long time to come, but the period of twenty-five years prescribed for the 50 per cent. Indianization of the commissioned ranks is unduly long. The existing number of British officers is more than enough for imparting military education to Indians and no fresh British officers should be recruited until their number is reduced to 25 per cent., and this ratio should be maintained ever afterwards. The Abhyudaya welcomes the report and says :—The members of the committee have displayed a broad outlook in considering the question and their recommendations are satisfactory in the existing circumstances. The Surya exhorts the Government to accept the recommendations and says that by doing so it would not only make Indians fit to defend themselves, but would also enhance its own moral prestige.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Leader writes :—Lord Birkenhead's speech in the House of Lords was as beautifully vague as ever. It was full of familiar platitudes and verbal jugglery. His Lordship is not lacking in the quality of decisiveness when he chooses. But his attitude towards Indian problems is sicklied over with the pale cast of thought. In the course of an article headed "More dirt from Birkenhead" the Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The Indian debate in the Lords afforded Lord Birkenhead yet another opportunity to fling his harsh expressions against Indian politicians. We are used to his vision and his vanity. Nothing from him surprises us : the surprise would be if he did not let off his favourite fireworks about co-operation and good-will. This sickening strain is most humiliating to our national self-respect. The Aj says that no reliance is to be placed on the hopes held out by the Secretary of State. Indians should neither care for his threats nor be taken in by his cajolery. They should determine and follow their own course and compel the authorities to take note of their movements. This will place the initiative in their own hands and the authorities will have to follow them either to conciliate or repress them. It is because of the abandonment of the non-cooperation movement and of the readiness of politicians to co-operate with the bureaucracy that their supplications are now being trampled upon and insults after insults are being heaped upon them. India's cause will not be furthered unless Indians once more have recourse to non-cooperation and organize the masses. The Oudh Akhbar says :—Lord Birkenhead bears a special grudge against the Swarajists and he is not prepared to subscribe even to Lord Olivier's formula that the Swaraj party should be treated with the same courtesy which is accorded to the opposition in constitutionally governed countries. Lord Birkenhead's assertion that it is the ideal of the Swarajists to wreck the constitution is only a half-truth. He ought to have added that the Swarajists offered the fullest co-operation to Government on certain terms and that they are not to blame if Government has refused to accept those terms. The Secretary of State unfolded the official view-point on the exchange ratio, military expenditure and other important questions, but he said nothing new and everywhere diverged from the Indian standpoint.

The Najat says that the actions of the British Government in regard to Indian matters are like the make-believe pranks of a monkey which though pleasing to the eye are really like deadly poison. Anon the Secretary of State for India stretches the hand of co-operation towards Indians and expresses sympathy with their aspirations, but again he conjures up the picture of communal differences and counsels patience to them. Pandit Motilal Nehru has very aptly said that India is like the drowning Jew who was given two or three duckings by a Christian sailor to force him to accept Christianity and was then abandoned to meet his end as a Christian. India was drowning, the Reforms raised her out of water; she was then given a ducking through the Councils that she might co-operate; at last she declared that she would practise honourable co-operation; she was then administered the baptism in the shape of the Muddiman Committee, but was ultimately left to drift and to drown. The truth of the matter is that the administration has no sympathy with Indians and it makes all sorts of promises only to mark time to deceive, to serve its purpose and to beguile them. If Indians also like it keep an eye over every action of its and stick to their demands with firmness, all this deception would instead of misleading them prove their prop at every stage. The Hamdam says that Lord Birkenhead's speech delivered in his usual style was not at all encouraging from the Indian standpoint as it breathed more of diplomacy than of sincerity. His Lordship said that the South African agreement would open out a new chapter of cooperation and friendly relations, but the statements of Indians that have recently appeared in the press do not justify this optimism. The local officials of the Union Government continue to encroach upon the civic and political rights of Indians; still if the Union Government were to show due regard for justice and sympathy in enforcing the terms of the agreement and Mr. Shastri were appointed as the Indian Agent there would be a change for the better in the lot of Indians. It was a cruel jest on the part of Lord Birkenhead to have accused Indians of indifference towards political reform. The shortcomings of the present Reforms have been established and they have proved a shameful failure, and it would be a ridiculous jumble of statesmanship and high-handedness to insist on their continuance in their present form. The desire of Indians for a change for the better must be respected.

Communal representation.

The Aligarh Mail takes Mr. Jinnah severely to task for securing the approval of some Muslim leaders at Delhi to the institution of joint electorates under certain conditions and says:—Either Mr. Jinnah has suddenly changed for reasons best known to himself or, to be bluntly outspoken, he has lost his political head. One of the two phenomena must explain the Jinnahian somersault in conceiving the abolition of separate electorates . . . The response from the accredited representatives of the Hindus to the overtures of peace and unity from the Jinnah conference is no less disheartening. The principles enunciated by them mean that the Muslims should give up communal electorates without securing the important safeguards proposed by the Jinnah conference and thus should lose even the tail of political power to be possessed by the Hindus who have already its head. To such a pass have the Muslims been brought by Mr. Jinnah's yielding leadership who hopes that the Musalmans will ratify the proposals of his conference. Far from ratifying them, the Muslims would like to rectify them, for by opening the very question of the abolition of communal electorates they strike at the very root of our political existence as a community. The Pratap says that the conditions proposed by the Muslim leaders for the establishment of joint electorates lack in the good-will and outlook required for the establishment of unity and contain an excessive element of bargaining. As nationalistic Congressmen we cannot welcome this settlement. The Congress committed a great blunder in being a party to the Lucknow pact as the principle of separate electorates has proved an obstacle in the path of nationalism. It will commit a still greater blunder if, with the object of satisfying communal follies, it adopts the policy of provincial redistribution on communal basis. Unity cannot be brought about by bargaining; it can only be established by a change of heart. The Rohilkhand Gazette is doubtful of the desirability of joint electorates in view of the communal tension prevailing in the country. The Sadaqat refers to the growing opposition among Muslim leaders and journals to the Delhi terms and hopes that when the feeling which has been generated owing to the intransigeance of the larger section of Hindus has subsided the wisdom shown by the Delhi leaders in urging the acceptance of joint electorates will be recognized. Patriotic and farseeing Hindus have appreciated the courage shown by Muslim leaders in trying to improve the present intolerable communal situation, but it is a pity that the majority led by men of the Malaviya and Lajpat Rai school have started hair-splitting. The Muslim demand for Reforms in the Frontier provinces or the separation of Sindh is not new, while the question of preferential treatment to minorities can be shelved if the Hindus are not agreeable to it. Anyway unity should be achieved by the Hindus accepting the reasonable Muslim terms. The Sada-i-Muslim refers to the intolerant and aggressive attitude of the Hindus and advises Muslims not to enter into any agreement with them without due consideration.

Indian States.

The report of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang and other Muslim leaders on the Indore affairs has received prominent attention in the Muslim press. The Medina says that the plight to which Muslims have been reduced in Indore as a result of the communal tension will constitute an extremely shameful chapter in the annals of the State. The sangathanist mischief-makers have not only tarnished the fair name of the rulers of Indore, but have created administrative difficulties by causing a lasting pain to Muslims. The Hamdam says:—The statement of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Muslims of Indore whose financial resources are generally very low as they are mostly labourers, artisans, petty shop-keepers and low-paid employés are the victims of a widespread conspiracy whose snares had been very cleverly laid by the protagonists of shuddhi and sangathan in the State after the abdication of the ex-Maharaja. Certain high-placed officials of the State who were previously only supporting the conspiracy with help and advice have now begun to participate in it actively. This is all the more deplorable because of the traditionally cordial relations of the State with Muslims and especially the benign attitude of the ex-Maharaja towards them. According to the joint statement Muslims were being expelled from the police and military departments, false rumours were circulated about Muslims planning to take out cow processions and to sacrifice cows on the occasion of the last Bakr-id, information was laid about arms being concealed in the Juma Masjid. Muslims were accused of murdering a Brahman and punished departmentally in spite of being acquitted by the law courts and inflammatory speeches were openly made at meetings in memory of Swami Shraddhanand. The anti-Muslim propaganda in Indore was also encouraged by the fact that the post of subedar there was held by an individual on whose support the sangathanists fully relied. Repeated processions with music were deliberately organized before mosques and the servants of the subedar wantonly resorted to firing. Indiscriminate arrests and lack of legal aid have now reduced Indore Muslims to sorry straits, and it is up to their co-religionists throughout India to help them liberally with funds. In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—The statement issued by the Prime Minister of Indore is only an attempt to white-wash the unjust doings of the State officials. Neither was the firing nor was the restriction on congregational prayers justified and Muslims should not rest content until the authorities acknowledge their mistake. The Haqiqat takes exception to the decision of the Government of India that the children of Nawab Hamidullah Khan should succeed to the Bhopal State and says that this ignoring of the claims of the eldest son of the late heir-apparent would lead to disputes in the family.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Condemning the activities of Khwaja Nizami as being calculated to prejudice Englishmen against the Arya Samajists the Arya Mitra urges the Government to keep a strict watch over the Khwaja's speeches and writings and says that on numerous occasions he has propagated schemes from the platform and the press which can never be called peaceful. Instead of extinguishing the fire of communalism he adds fuel to it. The Abhyudaya views with alarm the looting of the Hindus at Larkana and says that the Muslims probably want to make Sindh a separate province so that they may be able to do all over Sindh what they have done at Larkana. Their hooliganism seems to have reached its climax. The Government too will have its share of sufferings caused by this hooliganism and will find itself helpless in dealing with it. It is idle for the Hindu Sabhas to rely on the Government for their protection. If the Hindus do not stand upon their own legs they will be entirely at the mercy of the Muslims. It is not only the hooligan element among the Muslims which is responsible for creating trouble. The conviction of a Muslim M. L. C. during the last communal riots at Calcutta and the mention of a Muslim Municipal Commissioner in the reports from Hyderabad (Sindh) show that at the bottom of these disturbances there is a body of clever and educated Muslims whose object is to terrify the Hindus and overawe the Government. The Najat contrasts the insistence of Hindu publicists on expressions of regret and abhorrence by Muslims regarding the anti-Hindu riots of Malabar, Kohat and Rawalpindi with their failure to give expression to any such feelings regarding the doings of sangathanist maniacs at Barisal, Katarpur and Delhi. This mentality shows that it is regarded as a black crime in Hindu society to speak even the right in favour of Muslims, which means in other words that they regard their communal interests as superior even to the demands of civilization and humanity. How else, exclaims the paper, was it possible for the Hindus of Barisal to stop music before the hospital, but to go to the length of violating the law in insisting on music before mosques to outrage Muslim sentiment? Such is the mood of the Hindu masses, but even their selected leaders are no whit better. Mr. Malaviya at Chapra advised Hindus not to stop music before mosques and Dr. Moonje at Calcutta told his hearers not to act on the law of love but to adopt the lex talionis to convert Hindustan into a Hindu home. Only recently Professor Rama Deva speaking at Delhi threatened Muslims with the waving of the banner of "Om" on every mosque and Bhai Permanand declared at the Oudh Hindu Conference that he wanted to see an aggressive spirit developing among Hindus. In short Hindus regard it as a pious duty of theirs to injure the feelings of Muslims, and it is for Muslims in these circumstances to ponder how they can best counter these preparations. We do not favour the adoption of a policy of retribution. Muslims should first of all remove their weaknesses and try to become independent of others by arranging to provide for all their needs, for even if the Hindus, as they are being taught, adopt the peaceful weapon of economic and social boycott instead of sterner measures they can achieve their object and literally starve Muslims. It is therefore the bounden duty of every thoughtful Muslim to stint no effort in the advancement of his co-religionists and the defence of his faith, and to make the masses of his community self-supporting. If Muslims can accomplish even this much, they will be able to restrain this aggressive spirit of the Hindus as it is the wealth exploited by Hindu capitalists from Muslims which provides the sinews of war for oppressing Muslims. Muslims are themselves providing the wherewithal for their own undoing.

Pratap defamation case.

The judgement in the Pratap defamation case is being warmly commended by newspapers of all shades of opinion. The Pioneer writes:—The press has reason to be gratified at the result of the appeal in the Pratap case. The judgement of the Allahabad High Court is now available and it shows that in acquitting the editor of that paper of charges of defaming a sub-inspector of police the court laid down important principles regarding the ethics of newspaper criticism. The value of the judgement lies in its safeguarding the right of comment. The newspaper in question appears on the face of it to have done a service to the public. While malicious attacks by the press on Government officials deserve and will, it is to be hoped, meet all the rigour prescribed by the law, it is equally important that the newspaper's duty of criticizing those who abuse their authority should be fearlessly discharged. After giving a short history of the case the Sainik writes:—We have lost faith in Government courts to such an extent that we were not surprised at the judgements of the lower courts. When the appeal was being heard in the sessions court we humourously remarked that it would be no wonder if the traditions of Mainpuri were maintained by the enhancement of the sentence. And this is what actually happened. If we are surprised it is at the justice done by the High Court. This judgement shows that justice can still be expected of the High Court . . . This case gives a good idea of the apathy of the bureaucracy in India. So many complaints were published against Shiva Dayal, but it remained unmoved. Our rulers have no concern whatever with our happiness or troubles. If Mr. Dodd does not rest content with self-complacency but does a little introspection, he will be ashamed of these doings of his department. No wonder if there is disaffection against the present system of government when the protectors themselves have become devourers, when the officers who are paid for protecting the people from oppression themselves practise oppression upon them and the higher authorities pat those officers on the back. It is for the Sessions Judge to decide whether the charges against Babu Shiva Dayal Singh are false or not, but the department has not done its duty in this matter. In the interests of justice it is necessary that he should be transferred to some other place till the hearing of the case to be instituted against him is concluded.

Kakori conspiracy case.

Referring to the judgement in the Kakori conspiracy case the Leader writes:—The skill with which the ramifications of the alleged conspiracy were traced and the various links connected reflects credit on those in charge of the investigation. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The public will receive the judgement with horror. It is difficult to seriously believe that these young men are capable of conspiring against the great British Government. To sentence these misguided youths to such heavy terms of punishment and three of them to the extreme penalty of the law is possible only in India. We have here an instance of justice in all its relentlessness.

Case of Kharag Bahadur.

Newspapers continue to publish articles and poems eulogizing the chivalry of Kharag Bahadur and appealing for the exercise of the royal prerogative in his case. The Hamdam notes with gratification the effect produced on the public mind of Bengal by Kharag Bahadur's incident and hopes that the new Governor will show his large heartedness whether by ordering his immediate release or substantially reducing his sentence. The evil of abduction of women must be eradicated. The Udyog regards the action of Kharag Bahadur Singh in taking the law into his own hands as unjustified and says that if all men were to act similarly the country would be faced with a very critical situation and there would be left no need for law courts.

Lord Lytton's administration.

The Pratap says that Lord Lytton did not prove a capable Governor. During his term of office Hindu-Muslim tension assumed terrible proportions in Bengal, Calcutta remained the centre of booliganism for months, the life of Hindus was rendered unbearable by the Muslims, hundreds of temples were desecrated, thousands of images were broken and Hindu processions were stopped at a number of places and the authorities took part in spreading communal tension. The Aj says that not a single thinking individual of Bengal will be grieved at Lord Lytton's departure. During his tenure of office he did nothing for which Bengal should thank him. On the contrary the Black Act was enacted and hundreds of Bengali youths were imprisoned without trial. During his régime the liberty of the Calcutta University was also assailed. It will be the height of insincerity to express grief at the departure of such an administrator.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina ridicules the "so-called" deputation headed by the Maharaja of Mahmudabad which waited upon the Viceroy in connexion with the Hedjaz affairs and suggests that the action of the Maharaja in seeking the intervention of a non-Muslim power is opposed to the injunctions of Islam and predicts that the members of the deputation will be sorely disappointed. The Sarfaraz holds that the demands of the deputation do not at all imply foreign interference in Hedjaz affairs and wonders at the outcry of the Saudite papers against complaints regarding Ibn Saud being referred to his master. It is a pity that the Zamindar has tried to howl down the deputation as unrepresentative.

Ponobalia firing incident.

The Medina takes the Bengal Government and members of the Bengal Council severely to task for not doing justice to the victims of the Ponobalia firing incident and says:—The twenty innocent martyrs and the innumerable dying and the wounded could not secure any redress at the hands of those callous people who hold the reins of the council. Is the religious spirit of the Bengal Muslims dead? No, God willing, the two crores of Muslims of Bengal will demonstrate that the spirit of religious brotherhood still exists among them and they have already decided that the lives of Muslims will not be allowed to go so cheap as is thought by satanic Magistrates like Mr. Blandy.

Music before mosques.

Referring to permission for soft music by Hindus during Tarawih prayers in a mosque at Cawnpore the Tarjuman wonders how it can be determined whether the music is not loud enough to disturb prayers. Such orders can only lead to disturbances and it would be best if prayers were not at all interfered with.

Foreign affairs.

The Abhyudaya writes :—The despatch of reinforcements to China shows that, though Britain professes to be in favour of an agreement with China, she is really making preparations for a war with that country. Japan's demand for compensation from China is improper, inasmuch as the welfare of the whole of Asia, including Japan, lies in the triumph of China and the decline of the power of foreigners in the East. The Aj supports the proposal of the honorary secretary of the Indian Journalists' Association to send Indian correspondents to China for supplying correct reports about the happenings in that country, and says that as China is India's neighbour, and her struggle for independence is bound to have a great effect on India's own movement for freedom, it is absolutely necessary that Indians should remain correctly informed of the Chinese situation. The cablegrams from London in this connexion are sometimes contradictory and show that the British are carrying on propaganda against China. The Najat says that all the moves of land-grabbing Britain against the liberty-loving Chinese nationalists have failed, and the traitorous Chinese generals, in the pay of the British, who were fighting against their mother country have gradually gone over to the side of right and justice. The nationalists are now supreme in China. If the Powers take united action against the country Russia is sure to back her and this will lead to a sanguinary war in which all the Asiatic Powers also will be ranged on the side of China. The Desh Bhagat says that the news of the successes of the nationalists will be welcomed by all oppressed Asiatic peoples. The English, though badly worsted, are not yet refraining from their diabolic activities and are inciting the Americans to war. We believe that owing to the courage and sacrifice of the Chinese their country will, within three months, be purged of foreign impurity. Indian nationalists should learn a lesson from the self-sacrifice, courage and organization of the Chinese patriots and, spurning the bait cast by Britain, should try to stand upon their own legs.

Kakori conspiracy case.

The entire Hindi press regards the sentences passed in the Kakori conspiracy case as extremely severe. The Vartman writes :—The sentences are simply shocking. We cannot believe that these young men were capable of conspiring against the mighty British Government. It is in this unfortunate country alone that a misguided patriot can be sentenced to death like an ordinary criminal. It is to be hoped that the High Court will temper justice with mercy. The Abhyudaya says that impulsive youths, however misled, ought not to be sentenced to death, and hopes that on appeal the Chief Court will reduce at least the capital sentences. The Anand says that those who are acquainted with the character of some of the accused will continue to hold them innocent in spite of the judgement. Even assuming that these young men were guilty of conspiracy against the Government the passing of such sentences, with the object of correcting their mentality, is opposed to the dictates of justice and mercy. May it be hoped that by reducing the sentences the Government will show that it does not act in a spirit of vindictiveness, and that the Judges of the Chief Court will act mercifully towards them and spare their lives? The Pratap sarcastically congratulates Pandit Jagat Narain on the ability with which he espoused the cause of the Government. In impassioned language it describes the pain which the sentences passed on the accused will cause to their kinsmen, and says: O! Ideal, you are very cruel and terrible. No one knows how many sisters and brothers have to mourn for your sake. But awakening can come through sacrifice alone.

The tears of mothers and sisters will flow like the Ganges and the Jumna and will sweep away cowardice and slave mentality. What shall we say to the bureaucracy? Only this much that if there is any anarchist organization in the country the entire responsibility for it lies on the ruling body. By its short-sightedness the bureaucracy is digging its own grave. If Lord Birkenhead and his colleagues do not change their system of government the future historian may have to write that on account of the folly and obstinacy of British politicians the British Empire in India vanished in a very short time like an evil dream. The Haq pays a tribute to the skill with which the investigation in the case was conducted, and says that it was due to it that the accused could not escape the meshes of the law. Syed Ainuddin also deserves to be congratulated on the consummate tact shown by him in presiding over the trial. The Haqiqat joins with other Urdu journals in claiming clemency for the Kakori accused. The severity of the sentences pronounced by the judge shows that he has paid more regard to justice than to mercy. Of what use will the judge's advice to the accused to reform themselves be if they are either to pass the greater portion of their lives in jail or to be hanged? Their offence was, no doubt, a serious one, but regard should be shown for their youth. It is hoped that the Chief Court will show mercy when the case comes up to it in appeal, and will not ruin the lives of two dozen youths, and will at least modify the capital sentence.

Communal representation.

The Farrukh deplores the dissentient notes struck against joint electorates and the Delhi terms by both Hindus and Muslims as the future of the country depends on their acceptance. The Aziz-i-Hind stoutly denies that separate electorates have ever bred discord, and is glad that the selfish and sycophantic move of the Maharaja of Mahmudabad at Delhi in favour of joint electorates has been disowned with disgust by the whole of India. Religious riots are as old as India herself, and it is folly to father them upon separate representation. The joint electorates can send up only those representatives who are under the influence of other communities, and Muslims will lose their existence as a community. Qazi Maqbul Husain, writing in the Mashriq, deplores the opposition of Lala Lajpat Rai and the Hindustan Times to the formation of a separate province of Sindh and the extension of the reforms to Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier Province as there is a Muslim majority there and wonders why they are so much afraid of a Muslim majority anywhere. It would not be fair to Muslims that the Hindus should be in a majority everywhere, and an equitable solution, which would satisfy both the communities, should, therefore, be sought.

Lord Birkenhead's speech.

The Haqiqat characterizes Lord Birkenhead's speech in the House of Lords as a mass of verbiage devoid of foresight or statesmanship. It is, no doubt, an admirable attempt to stave off the immediate Indian demand for self-government by promises for the morrow and to discredit the Congress and the Swaraj party. His remarks about communal tension show that the British statesmen do not at all feel that its existence is a blot on the British escutcheon. His Lordship had not a word to utter which would have acted as a balm for the wounded hearts of Barisal Muslims. His cursory reference to the incident proves that our white masters attach little value to Indian lives. The utterance teems with advice and threats, and, as Lord Birkenhead insists on the Swarajists making an explicit declaration of co-operation, they should openly abandon obstruction and see whether His Lordship makes good his promises. The Hamdam regrets that Lord Birkenhead also supported the monstrous dictum enunciated by the gods on the Olympian heights of Simla that Bengal patriots should be detained in durance vile without trial in the interest of peace and order. His Lordship was pained at the communal tension prevailing in the country, but it must be said that, though Indian leaders are to a great extent responsible for it, it lies in the hands of those agents of the Government who are known as the "steel frame" of the Administration to create an atmosphere conducive to perfect unity between the two communities. Lord Birkenhead's phrase that co-operation does not connote abject acceptance of all Government proposals in the legislatures, no doubt, sounds very pleasing to the ears; but, in view of the action of Government in repeatedly riding roughshod over the explicitly-expressed wishes of the popular representatives, it cannot appeal to the hearts of Indians. The Sudharak writes:—Lord Birkenhead is an expert in telling hollow things, and at the same time he does not want to show the least benevolence towards India. He supports every act of injustice and high-handedness committed by the Government of India.

The Pratap defamation case.

The Hindi press has expressed general satisfaction at the judgement of the High Court in the Pratap case. The Pratap writes :—When we compare the judgements of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge with that of the Judges of the High Court we cannot but wonder what a large number of innocent persons must have fallen victim to the blunt knife of the Mainpuri justice. The judgement of the High Court is a strong commentary on the decisions of both the lower courts. Such is the Nadirshahi of the police that hardly any respectable citizen of the province could have escaped it. Bribery and oppression reign supreme in every village. The majority of police officials regard themselves as the uncrowned king of the country and vie with one another in perpetrating oppression. The poor man has to put up with all this quietly. It is our belief that the high officials are well aware of all this, and they know that every district of the province has its Shikohabad, but even then, in order to maintain their prestige, they do not want to curb the police. At the very commencement of the case we requested the Home Member and the Inspector-General of Police to transfer the sub-inspector, but far from taking any action they did not even acknowledge the receipt of our letter. The Police Administration report generally contains an appeal for public co-operation, but we want to tell the Home Member and the Inspector-General of Police that their attitude towards us in this case does not show that they or their pet department in any way need the co-operation of the public unless by co-operation they mean that the public should act as a puppet in the hands of the police. We were thinking of stopping the paper because we thought that it was useless to issue it when we could not even expose the hounds who were preying upon the poor, but the judgement of the High Court shows that in combating the police nabob one can at least find judges like Justice Banerji and Justice Walsh.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the Larkana disturbance the Udyog says :—We do not know what element of truth there is in the charges levelled against the police of Larkana, but the experience of Multan and Rawalpindi shows that communal feelings of the Muslims run high only in those places where the police officers belong to that community. At present the majority of the Larkana police is Muslim. Whatever its intention may be it is clear that it cannot cope with the situation which has arisen there. It is, therefore, necessary that some European and Hindu officials should be placed in charge of the town and an inquiry should be made into the incident. The Vartman appeals to the leaders of the Hindu Sabha to devise, at its coming session at Patna, some effective measures for helping the Hindus of Bengal in securing the reinstatement of the Maharaja of Nabha and the release of Kharag Bahadur. It says :—The atrocities and oppressions (on the Hindus) in Bengal have become intolerable. The brutal outrages perpetrated on our mothers and sisters, the desecration of temples and idols, the "murder" of Hindu rights, and the defencelessness of Hindus have now reached the limit. Oppressed and afflicted Hindus cannot tolerate them any longer. There is also a limit to patience, toleration and gentleness. It is idle to expect anything of the bureaucracy. It only knows how to rule over us; it does not care so much for our safety and the protection of our honour. The occurrence of these atrocities in broad daylight under its administration has indelibly blackened its face in the eyes of the world. The Hindu Sabha should organize a band of young men who would move about every village of Bengal for the protection of the honour of our mothers and sisters and temples. The Mansur complains that the Aryas utilize every opportunity to make improper attacks on Muslims, and reproduces from the Paigham Sulah (Lahore) the report of an Arya Shuddhi meeting held at the Gurukul Kangri on March 19 at which poems attacking Muslim kings were recited and various speakers urged a wholesale shuddhi of Muslims. Exciting speeches were made, and feeling was worked up against Muslims by painting them as robbers and abductors. Islam was styled as the religion of the sword. Muslims should now organize to save themselves from the attacks of Shuddhi and Sangathan. The Medina says that in every disturbance from Malabar down to Ponobalia and Larkana the Hindus were the aggressors, but it was the Muslims who suffered most in every way. The Hindus wanted to have a trial of strength, and when the Muslims replied the latter were beaten in the field of law on account of their poverty and disorganization. The Larkana disturbance was due to the Shuddhi movement, but the Hindus possess financial and legal resources. The result is that Muslims are being arrested and all cases are being decided against them. Similar is the case in Bengal also. Mischief is being done by processionists and Samajists, but Muslims are being involved in trouble. Will not the Muslim community pay heed to this problem? The Hamdam deplores the Larkana riots as another blow to the cause of national progress, and appeals to Arya Samajists not to employ underhand methods in their campaign of proselytism. Both law and religion make the male parents the guardian of the children, but the Arya workers want to gain possession of the children along with their Hindu mother, and have started a campaign of calumny against the Muslim district officer who is a member of a well-known nationalist family.

Indian states.

Referring to a report in the Riasat that the Nizam is not allowed to see persons and his firmans are countermanded under the orders of his English subordinates the Hamdam says that this means that His Exalted Highness and Sir Kishen Prasad are mere figureheads, and wonders how the eight crores of Indian Muslims have become so unfeeling that they can silently look on while their biggest Islamic state is being thus annihilated under their very nose. Referring to rumours regarding the removal of Nawab Talawat Jung and the Hindu Police Commissioner of Hyderabad the paper wonders how far the Government of India's craze for the appointment of European officials will continue. Is this the reward, the paper inquires, that the state is to get for its loyalty? Referring to the communiqué of the Prime Minister of Indore justifying the action taken by the state against Muslims the Mukhbir-i-Alam denies that the Prime Minister had any right to place any restriction whatsoever on Muslim prayers, and urges Muslim leaders not to rest content until the officials admit their orders to be unjustified and thus ensure that they would not be repeated. The Najat complains that efforts are now being made to ruin Muslims outside British India in those states in which bigoted Hindus are in power. It has been learnt about Indore that Arya preachers there made inflammatory speeches to set the Hindus against the Muslims, and when there was a riot the party in power made it a point to implicate respectable Muslims. At Jodhpur the Aryas took their procession in front of the main mosque at prayer time and played music for a long time, and when the Muslims offering prayer began to say something to the Aryas in a dignified manner, the latter attacked the former and also placed the entire blame for the disturbance on the law-abiding Muslims. At Alwar, at the instance of the sangathanists, a Hindu munsif kept three Muslim preachers in the lock-up for the whole night simply for the offence of delivering sermons on theological questions in the mosque and challaned their case to Alwar. This shows that all this is being done in an organized manner in accordance with a scheme to ruin Muslims in Indian states.

The Sandhurst Committee's Report.

Referring to the report of the Sandhurst Committee the Medina says:—The recommendations, on the whole, are inadequate. India's needs are much greater. If England has one Sandhurst India should have at least four. The Haqiqat is glad that the Skeen Committee has framed recommendations in order to increase the Indian element in the higher ranks of the army. Its suggestion that by 1952 fifty per cent. of the royal commissions should be held by Indians shows that they will be trained for higher military duties. The concession about the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst is an equally important one, and the members of the Committee deserve to be congratulated on the sense of justice displayed by them.

The Council of State.

Referring to the restoration of the salt duty by the Council of State, and the inability of the Legislative Assembly to effect any material reduction in taxation and expenditure, the Medina says:—The salt tax, the postal rates, the military expenditure, the rate of exchange, and legislative and financial measures remain intact. The few amendments that were made were insignificant. Such being the result of the working of the first session of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State how can we say that the real demands of India will be conceded through constitutional agitation unless we have strength in our arms and hearts?

Muslim affairs.

The Hamdam deplores the campaign of calumny started against the Mahmudabad deputation by the Saudites, and denies that it wants British interference in the Hedjaz. The Rohilkhand Gazette denounces the Mahmudabad deputation as unrepresentative of Indian opinion, and says that it was only an attempt on the part of the Maharaja to avenge himself on Sunnis, as a Shia ought to, by severely wounding their feelings and to secure support for his telegram of two or three months ago and to give his masters an opportunity for satiating their land-hunger. The Muslims had neither asked the Maharaja to organize any such deputation, nor are they so fallen that they could like the Maharaja brook interference in their religious matters by strangers.

Political propaganda.

The Aj agrees with the view of Mr. Saklatwala that India's emancipation can be brought about only by organizing the labour and tenantry and establishing fraternal relations all over the world with all those who share their views, and says that, although Mr. Gandhi's charkha can improve the economic condition of India, it can never secure freedom. The Sudharak publishes an article in which the writer, praying God to reincarnate himself in India, says :—Your votaries are being insulted ; the images representing your brave form are being dishonoured and the sound of the bells and conches and the shouts of jai coming from our temples are being treated as revolutionary slogans. You regarded the abduction of your Sita to be an unpardonable offence, but hundreds of Sitas are being abducted in this unfortunate land, the chastity of thousands of chaste women is being violated, and children are being kidnapped in broad daylight. You slew one Marich (a deceitful demon), but now thousands of such demons are roaming about in this country to ensnare the unwary masses. Does the present reformed era in any way fall short of the despotic reign of Ravan ?

The Maharaja of Nabha.

The Indian Daily Telegraph, which almost in every issue resounds the praises of the Maharaja of Nabha and pleads for his reinstatement, complains that the question relating to " the perils under which His Highness the Maharaja of Nabha and his family live in their enforced exile in Dehra Dun " was treated by the Inspector-General of Police with " unpardonable levity " during the last session of the Council, and says that callousness and irresponsibilities were writ large on his statement.

Foreign affairs.

The extremist Press continues to indulge in vehement attacks on British policy in China. The Sainik says:—What should India do in case a war breaks out between China and England? There can be only one answer to this question. India should not stand in the way of Chinese emancipation. China is not waging a war of aggression; she only wants to defend her rights. It is, therefore, a sin to attack her. India has ties of religion with her. Indian freedom is bound up with the freedom of China. If England attacks China India will not willingly help the former in this sinful act by sending any Indian troops or supplying even a single shell. India will not commit suicide by helping England in such an unjust war. The heart of awakened India will ever pray to God that China may come off victorious and free in this war between gods and demons. In the course of a strong article, denouncing European "Imperialists" for inciting their nations to declare war upon China, the Vartman says:—The world knows that these Imperialists are blood-thirsty. They deliberately do all they can to provoke war. In order to gain their selfish ends they make no scruple whatever to raise piles of human heads. They do not hesitate to employ machine-guns to compel people to acknowledge as civilization what is in fact brutality. They commit robbery in broad daylight in the name of commercial progress. These politicians are so dangerous that in order to enlist support in favour of war they get their own brethren killed secretly and throw the blame on others . . . In spite of all this the people of England, France, America, and Italy are acting blindly and are not asking their Governments to turn out their blood-thirsty politicians. The Aj apprehends serious injury to the cause of Indian Swaraj and of the independence of Asiatic countries as a result of the present machinations of Western Imperialists to enslave China and says:—Before it is too late we should awaken public opinion in the country. If we can do nothing else we should at least impress upon our rulers that we thoroughly understand their game. If possible we should arrange to send a medical mission to China to attend to wounded nationalist Chinese. This will be a proof of our sympathy with nationalist China and serve as an encouragement to her in her struggle. In another article the paper writes:—The blood of just-minded men cannot but boil at the attempt of Western imperialistic powers to incite Russia against China. If the Eastern countries combine in self-defence in the same way in which the white Imperialists have formed a clique to suck the life-blood of China then alone can they save themselves from Western oppressors. If China cannot meet force by force she will be well advised to adopt Mahatma Gandhi's method. The Hamdam regards the British activities in China as a glaring instance of selfishness and mischief-making and says that at first an apple of discord was thrown among the Chinese, and, when they began to quarrel among themselves, the whites, under the pretext of protecting their lives and interests, began to exterminate them like rats in their own land. As a matter of fact, Britain and her allies want to utilize the present opportunity to destroy the Bolshevik influence in China. But it is noteworthy that in spite of all the provocations offered to the Soviet Government, its Note to Peking is remarkable for its spirit of humanity and betokens the moral triumph of Bolshevism.

Communal representation.

The Leader writes:—We think the Hindu Mahasabha at Patna was wise not to commit itself to the Delhi proposals of some leading Muslims. In the first place they have not received the imprimatur of their community; in fact they have been repudiated by not a few Muslims of prominence. In the second place Mr. Jinnah spoke of them as if they were an ultimatum which could be accepted or rejected but not modified. But, more important than either of these considerations, the offer to do away with separate electorates was conditioned by proposals utterly irrelevant to the subject in issue. It is not a little embarrassing that every time the demand for further constitutional reforms comes to the fore the communal Muslim demands should be put up higher and higher, and concession thereof, in whole or in large part should be made a condition of Muslim support of the demand for reform. We are firmly of opinion that there is no case for further "concessions" to Muslims in the matter of representation in elected bodies. The Aligarh Mail publishes a number of statements of Muslim leaders against the abolition of separate representation, and says:—When the Muslims see that Government offices are predominantly manned by the Hindus and Government service solves, however insignificantly, only the Hindu aspect of the problem of the unemployment of educated Indians, Muslims become naturally discontented and demand their separate representation in Government service. Unless, therefore, the Muslims are adequately represented in Government service and the legislatures of the country, in which even now there resides much governing power, the Muslims can justly continue to demand communal representation which can be done away with only when Muslims are given an adequate number of legislative seats, and Government service has solved, though partially, their aspect of the problem of unemployment. Till such a consummation has been brought about the cry for Muslim representation in every phase of administration must be heard, however it may be decried by Hindu monopolists of political power. The Adalat contends that if the principle of mixed representation is accepted the Muslims will not be able to send their true representatives to the legislatures, inasmuch as the Hindus being richer in every province will bribe the voters and get only such men returned as are worthless from the Muslim point of view. Exhorting the Muslims not to accept the principle of mixed representation the Anis refers to the general satisfaction expressed by the Hindu press and public at the Barisal firing, and says that in the present state of communal tension it would be nothing short of suicide for the Muslims to place themselves in the hands of the majority. They should, rather, unanimously declare that if the Government follows this weak policy of favouring the Hindus they would boycott every representative institution of the Government. The Haqiqat contains an article in which the writer contends that, in view of the present state of communal distrust prevailing in the country, the conference of the Muslim leaders at Delhi was quite unnecessary and premature. Before considering the question of introducing joint representation the leaders ought to have considered whether the atmosphere of the country was favourable to it.

Indian States.

The externment of Dr. Kitchlew from Indore has evoked strong protests in the Muslim press. The Abhyudaya says that the order of externment need not cause the least surprise, for no one, however highly-placed, would have been permitted to make the kind of speech which Dr. Kitchlew did, in any Indian State much less in a Muslim State. Dr. Kitchlew's remark that the Muslims did not expect justice in the Indore riot case constitutes a grave reflection on the administration of the State. He should not forget that such an utterance was possible in a Hindu State alone. No Hindu could dare make such a statement in Bhopal or Hyderabad. This particular matter, if nothing else, is sufficient to prove that the people of Indore enjoy greater freedom than the subjects of many other States and that the Indore authorities are more justice-loving. The Haq contends that Dr. Kitchlew had gone to Indore simply for defending his innocent and oppressed co-religionists, and not for avenging the blood of the martyrs or kindling the fire of communal antipathy in the State. The Haqiqat says:—Dr. Kitchlew is by nature a very quiet and sober person, and it is difficult to believe that he incited Muslims at Indore against Hindus. Anyway, all Muslims should protest against his expulsion as there will be no one left to secure justice for the oppressed Muslims of Indore. The Rahnuma says that the proceedings of the special tribunal appointed to try the riot cases remind one of the martial law-courts of the Punjab. This attack on the religious liberty of the Muslims of Indore is unprecedented; and, if the Muslims all over India, the Muslim League, the Khilafat Committee and other bodies do not resist it the condition of Muslims in all the Hindu States of Rajputana and Central India will be rendered precarious. The Hamdam also writes in a similar strain.

The Najat writes:—The bigotry of the present Indore officials is responsible for the outbreak of communal riots in that State and the condition of the Muslims there at present is the same as that of the people of the Punjab during the martial law régime of Dyer and O'Dwyer. The Haqiqat writes:—The changes which are being brought about in the Hyderabad State have embittered the feelings of the Muslims not only against the Government of India but also against the British Government; and, if the treatment accorded to the Nizam like that accorded to the Maharaja of Nabha ultimately leads to the formation of an organization among Muslims similar to that of the Akalis the responsibility for it will rest on the shoulders of the Government of India. The Hamdam says:—The policy of intervention in the internal affairs of the Indian States and of appointing British officials in them is an unholy and ugly blot on the British character. Lord Irwin's reply to the Maharaja of Kashmir shows that a number of States have still to be severely dealt with, and that His Excellency intends to construct new edifices on the ruins of old agreements. The Najat complains that thirty-two parties for carrying on shuddhi work, said to be supported by State officials, have been organized in the Bharatpur State, and that the Gaushala court has collected nine lakhs of rupees by awarding decrees against Muslims. It hopes that Muslims all over India will strive to mitigate the sufferings of their co-religionists in Bharatpur. The Aziz-i-Hind draws the attention of Government to the unsatisfactory state of affairs in the Dholpur State and says that since the Maharaja went to Kasauli things have gone from bad to worse. The officials of the State are all irresponsible persons in whom the public has no confidence. The paper requests the Government of India to appoint, in consultation with the Maharaja, an officer who may have real control over the State affairs during his absence.

Political propaganda.

Referring to the resolution passed at the Bengal Provincial Conference, urging the boycott of British goods, the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—When Bengal makes up its mind and has found the proper leader it will never end like the Bardoli decision to be turned down on account of any accident. And the lash on the stomach will be most really felt by the shop-keeper nation. Perhaps a successful boycott will be the best proof for the forthcoming Royal Commission that the people of India deserve Swaraj. In the course of an article, reviewing Dr. Rutherford's "Modern India," the paper writes:—What has the British Government in India done to assuage, if not to heal, to mitigate, if not to obliterate the wrongs, oppressions and sins, moral, political and intellectual, committed in all conscience by its agents? . . . Dr. Rutherford has witnessed the ravages of British imperialism in the unfed, ill-fed and under-fed millions whose parched tongues protruding from sunken cheeks and palsied lips tell the sad tale of want and famine. The book catalogues and condemns the tale of travesty of British justice and mockery of British equality, exploding the iniquitous theory of British "trusteeship." It is a strong and incontrovertible plea for self-government for India. Reviewing the happenings of the last year the Aj says that it was a most inauspicious year which saw tyrannical Powers growing stronger and the poor and the weak still more helpless. The bureaucracy became more irresponsible and public opinion was trampled upon all the more firmly. The Muslim mentality to press down Hindus with the help of the officials became more pronounced, and Hindu religious festivals were stopped at various places under the unjust orders of the bureaucracy. The outstanding feature of the last sambat year was the accentuation of the tendency to lose sight of the spirit of self-help, self-respect and liberty, and to look up to the bureaucracy and to serve personal or communal ends through its help, and the inevitable result of it was that the attitude of the bureaucracy got stiffened and its policy became more and more reactionary as was evidenced by the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly. The Vartman takes the leaders to task for not fittingly celebrating the national week, and, referring to the "martyrs" of the Jallianwala Bagh, says:—We did not properly honour our martyrs, we did not appreciate their value, else we should have been emancipated by now. Do not forget the holy blood of these martyrs. They are your saviours. The Medina supports the view of Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar that the Congress should devote itself to the task of Hindu-Muslim unity and the organization of villages and labourers and says:—The proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and the Councils show that this political evolution is strengthening the hands of the Government and rendering Indians more and more helpless. Nothing could be done even in those provinces where Congressmen preponderated. We do not know what the Swarajist members of the Congress have achieved by ruining non-co-operation. They have, on the other hand, endangered the Congress itself.

The Hindu Mahasabha.

The Pratap exhorts the leaders of the Hindu community assembled at the Patna session of the Hindu Mahasabha to formulate a definite programme for the furtherance of the Patuakhali satyagrah. It refers to the restrictions imposed on the Hindu festivals and Hindu processions at various places and remarks that the maintenance of those restrictions, despite the protests and representations of the Hindus, points to the inevitable conclusion that in order to protect their rights, Hindus should rely on self-help and not on official favour, The goddess of social and civic liberty is very callous. It is impossible for one to conciliate her without sacrificing one's head. The paper also warns the Hindu leaders and workers not to be deluded by the false notion which has been created in certain quarters that Lord Irwin holds pro-Hindu views and remarks that even if it was true about him at the time he left the British shores it is no longer so. Evidently the British Government is a votary of the policy of " divide and rule." The Aj agrees with Dr. Moonje's view that Hindus should mind their own business without entering into compacts with Muslims, and that the Lucknow pact has been productive of more harm than good. It is only too true that unity which has been purchased can never be lasting, and that its price will continue to rise until the purchaser becomes bankrupt. Dr. Moonje is not well advised in urging the Hindus to go single-handed before the next Statutory Commission. They should neither buy Muslim help, nor go before the Commission for the gift of Reforms. They should hold an independent conference to give expression to their views. It is open to the bureaucracy to accept or reject them. The Abhyudaya remarks:—The address is worthy of Dr. Moonje. It throws light on all the important questions and is characterised by rare outspokenness. His words that the emancipation of the Hindus lies in Shuddhi and Sangathan are pregnant with truth. We endorse all that he said about the Muslim demands. What has appealed to us most is his advice that we should not attach undue importance to Hindu-Muslim unity, and that we should give up the false idea that we cannot advance without Muslim co-operation.

The Sandhurst Committee's Report.

Commenting on the Skeen Committee's Report the Swadhin remarks:—Much though we wish that these recommendations had been a little more generous yet we cannot help admitting that if these recommendations are given effect to at an early date we shall have made a great advance on the existing condition. The Shankar remarks that the report is quite in keeping with the bureaucratic mentality. The Medina says that although the rate of progress proposed by the Sandhurst Committee for the Indianization of the Army is comparable with the proverbial pace of the tortoise, the Government of India and the British Government wish to stifle even these halting recommendations. The statue that was raised in eight months by Sir A. Skeen and his colleagues has been dashed to pieces on the iron floor of the House of Lords. The white rulers are so intoxicated with their power that they do not see any cruelty or injustice in leaving thirty crores of people to pine away in despair.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Arya Mittra contends that the exhibition of devilry by Muslim goondas in Larkana was not the result of a temporary fit of fanaticism, but of a preccncerted plan by mullahs and maulvis and urges Government to take measures to render the repetition of such violence in Larkana impossible. It should keep a strict eye on Muslims in general, and mullahs and maulvis in particular, for these fanatics are mostly responsible for initiating communal riots. Referring to the likelihood of bloodshed by Muslim goondas the Chand warns Muslims that each drop of the blood of martyrs will cause a conflagration which will consume all mosques. Praying God to reincarnate Himself in India to put an end to the oppression of the demons and thereby enable the gods to perform their religious sacrifices the Arya Samachar says:—What oppressions are being committed in the name of humanity and religion! "The creatures of Allah" raise objection even to the festival which is celebrated in your memory, and the sound of the name Rama disturbs their prayers. Does this sort of oppression in any way fall short of the oppressions of the demon king Ravan? The Medina and the Haqiqat take the Delhi authorities severely to task for their inability to arrest those persons who killed Mufti Mahboob Ali after the murder of Swami Shraddhanand. The former writes:—Why should the authorities trace the culprits? The Hindus form the majority; they are rich, they are part of the Administration and carry influence in the courts, whereas the Muslims are poor, helpless and disorganized. Lakhs of Muslims have been ruined since the Malabar disturbance to the Barisal riot. Their lives are useless and their blood is cheap. To-day they are helpless in India and are surrounded by thousands of enemies. O religious leaders! What is all this! The blood of Swami Shraddhanand turned out to be a source of new life for Hindus, while the blood of the martyr, Mufti Mahboob Ali, could not even evoke a cry for redress.

Proposed Indian Navy.

In the course of an article on the creation of an Indian Navy the Vartman writes:—The land army is already like a heavy stone on the breast of India; now another stone is sought to be placed on it in the shape of the Indian Navy. The incarnations of crooked diplomacy and sophistry seek to make out that the Indian Navy is meant to serve Indian interests alone. We should like to ask them as to who it is who aims at the invasion of India through the sea. Why do not they say that in the Near East and Asia there are growing feelings against British imperialism and the British Imperialists have now become afraid? Why is dust being thrown in the eyes of the world in the name of India? Why is it not admitted that the Indian Navy will be used in the interests of British imperialism as the Indian Army is being employed against China? The Medina says that the proposed Indian Navy will not only mean an additional heavy burden on the Indian tax-payer, but will prove a fresh instrument for keeping Asia in chains. To raise a heavy mountain on the destiny of Asia out of the limbs and pockets of helpless and enslaved Indians is a rare example of the capitalistic mentality of Conservatives. The statement made by Earl Winterton that the Navy was being created in response to the demands of Indians is a white lie.

The Case of Kharag Bahadur.

The Himalayan Times has published a special "Raj Kumari Number," containing mostly extracts from the speeches and newspaper articles and resolutions passed by various public bodies appealing for the exercise of the Royal prerogative in the case of Kharag Bahadur. In extenuation of the murder the paper says:—Kharag Bahadur tried all legitimate means to bring Hira Lal and his accomplices to justice, but either through the influence of the deceased or due to some unknown causes his attempts failed. What, then, was he to do to have justice done to an outraged sister of his? The Shankar extols the action of Kharag Bahadur Singh in murdering Hira Lal, and opines that his action will have a deterrent effect on those who outrage the modesty of women.

The Pratap defamation case.

Commenting on the decision in the Pratap defamation case the Shankar remarks:—The victory of the Pratap represents the victory of the entire Hindi press, and it deserves the congratulations of the whole Hindi world. The value of the appeal in this case lies in the fact that it will show to the whole country to what extent the Press has to face the wrath of the authorities. The Sainik writes:—The judgement of their Lordships have enlarged the rights of journalists and have saved the lives of crores of oppressed people of this unfortunate country. This case has done much public good. In a way the judgement sounds the death-knell of "Zainuddinshahi" of Mainpuri. This is the beginning of the end of "Zainuddinshahi" which is synonymous with arbitrariness.

The Kakori dacoity case.

Commenting on the judgement in the Kakori dacoity case the Sainik writes:—Although we have generally no faith in law courts we have no material on the basis of which we can say anything against the judgement in the Kakori case. Assuming, therefore, that the accused are really guilty we are emphatically of opinion that the sentences are vindictive. We are not prepared to admit that these handful of young men could overthrow the British Empire. What these brave sons have done they have done like inebriated soldiers; they had grown tired of the irresponsiveness of the bureaucracy; they thought that was the only course for them for the realization of the highest aspirations of their dear country. Who can say that these acts of theirs were not the results of the present political situation of the country? Even sinful and terrible Vindictiveness herself should be ashamed of sentencing to death young men inspired by high ideals. Are we to believe that the three young men will be sacrificed at the altar of vindictiveness? Humanity, statesmanship and prudence demand that at least the death sentences should be commuted.

Indians in the Colonies.

The appointment of Mr. Srinivas Sastri as the first Agent-General to South Africa, has been heartily welcomed by newspapers of all shades of opinion. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—We have no doubt that Mr. Sastri will add to the long list of successful Indians who have filled high appointments. Hereafter we hope we may have more Indian Ambassadors in other places. The Leader writes :—In a communication received by us the Young Men's Union of Mombasa says that it seems that the Kenya Government, " with the consent of the Colonial office, is determined to revive segregation in Mombasa township." The Union further points out that the area in question is the healthiest part of Mombasa town, and that under the proposed policy non-British Europeans, including ex-enemy aliens, will be given preference over British Indian subjects. It is to be earnestly hoped that the Government of India will see that the rights and privileges of the people of this country resident in Kenya are not further curtailed and that justice is done to their claims in regard to the purchase of land in township areas, unrestricted by any policy of segregation.

The Maharaja of Nabha.

The Himalayan Times publishes a letter by a " Brother Prince, " in the course of which the writer says :—The Indian Princes do feel that Government's action against Nabha has set a most unconstitutional and dangerous precedent. Nabha has suffered terribly, and his sufferings have been heart-rending. Only princes of his order can feel and fully appreciate what an agony it is for a prince to be deprived of his state, his power, his dignity and honour, his liberty as well as the happiness of his family.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 30, 1927.

Foreign affairs.

The Aj deplores the intellectual slavery which makes Indians take delight in their subjection and in helping their rulers to subjugate their own neighbours. It is noteworthy, it says, that Indian journalists too play into the hands of the British publicity department in publishing news from London regarding China, painting Chinese nationalists as miscreants, robbers, Bolshevists and oppressors. The Indian journalists will be well advised to consider the question of saving Indian readers from falling victims to the tactics of British propagandists. They should at least refrain from publishing false and coloured reports about China. The Najat is glad that the magnanimity and love of peace evinced by the Soviet in its note to Peking have averted the dangers which threatened China and disappointed the Powers which had instigated the Peking officials. The note shows that Russia is not an advocate of war but is merely an enemy of the capitalists, and that is why the capitalistic nations like Britain are always afraid of the Bolsheviks. The Sewak holds the British responsible for the firing on foreigners by the Chinese and says that it was Britain which by sending a large number of troops to that country provoked the Chinese nationalists and forced them to resort to every method, whether fair or foul, against foreigners Britain wanted to array all the powers against China by circulating reports about Chinese atrocities, but the news received so far shows that the exhausted Powers of Europe want to avoid war in the near future. Europe has taken enough advantage of Asia's apathy. The consequences of what Britain is secretly doing will be disastrous. The Hamdam remarks that if the Chinese nationalists continue their devoted efforts to emancipate their country, Britain and her allies will have to leave China bag and baggage.

Governor-designate of the United Provinces.

The appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman as the next Governor of the United Provinces has on the whole been favourably received by the Press. The Pioneer writes: –There can be little doubt that the best available men have been chosen to succeed Sir Harcourt Butler and Sir William Marris. Both Burma and the United Provinces are to be sincerely congratulated. Even those who have been clamouring for a non-civilian Governor will, we believe, on reflection hold that their essential requirements should be largely met by the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman. In him the provinces will have a Governor who has a specially intimate knowledge of the principles which have actuated Parliament in launching the great experiment. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We heartily congratulate these provinces in obtaining a Governor who has a large heart. As the Home Member of the Government of India Sir Alexander has been the recipient of handsome acknowledgments from all quarters of the House for his sympathy and touch of human feeling in his dealings with men and measures. We predict for the United Provinces during the next five years a reign of peace and good-will, with the benignant personality of the Governor most anxiously watching the trend of events and ever ready even to go out of the way to conciliate public opinion when expressed with vigour and conviction. The Aj says:—Our opposition is not to individuals but to the system which we shall have to change through our own efforts. This being the case, there is no reason to shed tears over the new appointment. The Abhyudaya remarks:—Although on principle we are opposed to the appointment of a member of the heaven-born service to the exalted office of the Governor, we congratulate Sir Alexander Muddiman and the people of the United Provinces on his appointment as the next Governor of the United Provinces. Sir Alexander is a gentleman reputed not only for his unfailing courtesy but also for his broad-mindedness and sympathy. His greatest qualification is that he is anxious to dispense justice and is not an opponent of India's freedom. It is no doubt true that Sir Alexander's path in this province is strewn with thorns, but we know that he is a strong man who cannot be daunted by difficulties. This is why we extend him a hearty welcome to this province and hope that it will prosper during his régime. The Oudh Akhbar congratulates Sir Alexander Muddiman on his appointment and says:—So long as the present system of government is not changed, even if an Indian is appointed as Governor he will not be able to do anything for the province. The people of the United Provinces are, however, far more fortunate than those of Burma, because even if Sir Alexander is not able to confer any great boon on them, they must rest assured that he will at least not let their grievances remain unredressed. It is, therefore, hoped that they will do their best to make his Government a success. The Hamdam deplores that in appointing Sir Alexander Muddiman as the Governor of the United Provinces the Government have not paid any regard to the general wish of the public that the Governorship of the United Provinces should not be regarded as a prize post for the civilians and have selected a man who has no experience of this province. Sir Alexander is a part and parcel of the "steel frame," instances of whose oppressions are recorded in a number of places on the pages of the history of British Government in India. If he shakes hands with Indians in velvet gloves they would surely appreciate his courteousness, but so long as the "steel frame" exists India can never extricate herself from the iron grip of these velvet gloves. Sir Alexander is no doubt a real gentleman, but he will nevertheless have to maintain the traditions of the "steel frame" and then the exultation of the Indian journals at his appointment will prove to be illusory. The Haqiqat writes:—Being a European Sir Alexander has been selected as the successor of Sir William Marris and the claims of Sir Atul Chandra Chatterji have been overlooked. It is, however, fortunate for the people that the reins of Government have been placed in the hands of an enlightened and broad-minded civilian.

Hindu Maha Sabha.

The presidential address of Dr. Moonje at the Patna session of the Hindu Maha Sabha has evoked strong comments in the Muslim Press. The Aligarh Mail writes:—Dr. Moonje's presidential address to the Maha Sabha held at Patna was a remarkable feat of bullyism and an open and direct challenge to Muslims. When the Muslims are painted as ravishers of Hindu women they can justifiably and righteously be indignant and are entitled to condemn the shameless, degenerate and indecent communalism of Dr. Moonje who, in his desire to broadcast the highly imaginary Muslim aggression, has lost all sense of honour and self-respect and has touched the very bottom of the abyss of shamelessness and indecency in appealing to the Hindus for "better treatment of women ravaged (sic) against their will." The Himalayan Times writes:—Dr. Moonje's address as a whole is an echo of those feelings which are weighing heavily on the hearts of all the Hindus of India. The Hindus have been making unbecoming overtures to the Muslims all these forty years for unity, but the more we advanced towards them our brethren walked back always keeping us at a distance. The only road to Hindu-Muslim unity is to give up running foolishly after those who do not manifest any regard or respect for us and to organize ourselves socially as well as politically on purely democratic and liberal lines. Commending the resolution of the Hindu Maha Sabha that Hindus should celebrate the tercentenary of Shivaji the Vartman says:—The stories of Shivaji should be recited in every Hindu home and every Hindu child should take lesson from it. The memory of Shivaji should fill every Hindu with pride. The Aj approves of the decision of the Hindu Maha Sabha regarding joint electorates and communal representation, but says that it has gone beyond its province in issuing mandates to the Congress. This national institution surely cannot play to the tune of communal organizations. If Hindus will attack nationalism, the bureaucracy will continue to dance over their heads, for to rule over the country means to rule over the Hindus. The Surya remarks:—Dr. Moonje's address will constitute an important chapter in the modern history of Hindu civilization. Although we have our own differences with Dr. Moonje, we entirely agree with his statement that the communal tension received an impetus from the speeches of the Congress leaders, that the Muslims should be left to themselves, and that there should be no redistribution of the provinces now. The Medina writes:—Dr Moonje's address contains nothing but abuse of Muslims. It aims at harassing them and spurning all the pacts and compromises which are calculated to establish happy relations between the two great communities. Judging from this speech it can be asserted that the sole object of the Hindu Sabha is to come to grips with Muslims in order to ruin them or at least to secure for Hindus the position of a dominant but cowardly and tyrannical race. Friends, we admit that you are superior in numbers, wealth and education and that the white Government is the enemy of Muslims and has been overawed by you. But we assure you that Muslims who are mad after their religion cannot be ruined so easily. The object for which the Hindu Sabha has been established can be achieved only when rivers of blood have flown over the country and a large portion of your growing numbers has been laid low in blood and dust at the hands of Muslims. This will involve both the communities and also the country in ruin. The Muslims, however, are even now magnanimously prepared to unite with you. The Haqiqat says that every sentence of the speech serves as an arrow to wound the feelings of the Muslim community. The Hamdam says that if Doctor Moonje thinks that Swaraj is bound up with Shuddhi and Sangathan, Sir Abdur Rahim is also justified in saying that it depends upon the tabligh and tanzim of the Muslim community. The Haqiqat observes that Dr. Moonje's address has startled even those good-natured Muslims who under the influence of Mahatma Gandhi were inebriated with the prospect of Hindu-Muslim unity. The greatest duty of Muslims at the present juncture is to hold fast to their religion and to reform and organize their community. If they do so they will see that all the diabolical forces which boast of their power and number and are straining every nerve to trample the bright religion of Islam will kneel down before them and they will again be able to sing: "China and Arabia are ours, India is ours, we are Muslims, the whole world is our house."

The Kakori dacoity case.

A number of papers are strongly protesting against the treatment accorded to the prisoners in the Kakori dacoity case. The Aj invites the attention of the Home Member of the United Provinces Government to the letter of Mr. Ganesh Shanker Vidyarthi regarding the ill-treatment of Kakori conspiracy case prisoners in jails and expresses the hope that he will give due consideration to it as an Indian. It says that the whole of India will protest against the inhuman treatment meted out to these prisoners in respect of feeding them forcibly. It is only in this country that political prisoners are classed with ordinary criminals. The former should be accorded a treatment similar to that accorded to foreign prisoners in this country. The Vartman says:—These prisoners could not tolerate the arbitrary enforcement of the jail regulations and had therefore to refuse to obey the Nadirshahi orders. These orders are not ordinary. They are the orders of the omnipotent ruler of the hell of the heartless Indian bureaucracy . . . May we hope that the Home Member will do justice to the unfortunate accused and will leave no room for the charge that Indians seek to justify their position by repressing their fellow-countrymen. Our hope, however, lies mainly in our own young men. They ought to raise their voice against such ill-treatment and show that even today there are sympathizers of the Kakori accused, who will leave no stone unturned for their sake. The Hindi Kesari remarks:—It has been the traditional policy of the British Government to crush the energies of the youths of this country instead of directing them into proper channels. Condemnation of the action of the Kakori convicts is but natural when it is considered how suicidal an armed revolution against the existing powerful Government will prove to be. But is it not extremely callous to laugh at them if they were driven to this last resource when all other doors were closed upon them? The Government is labouring under a delusion if it thinks that it can put an end to revolutionary activities by inflicting inhuman punishment on these convicts. True remedy consists in reforming the existing system of administration and thereby changing the sphere of activities of the youths of this country. The Bharat Dharma remarks:—In the presence of such fearless youths as have been severely punished in the Kakori dacoity case it is the height of shamelessness and an insult to the country to allege that there are no youths in the country fit to be appointed as military officers. What feat would these youths not perform if they were given an opportunity by the rulers to display their valour and to serve the country? The youths of the Kakori case are being hanged today. Is it not cruelty of justice?

Communal representation.

The Surya apprehends that there is some mystery about the sudden offer of the Muslims regarding joint electorates and remarks that a careful consideration of the question makes it clear that if the offer is accepted the Hindus will be the losers. That this offer should have been made when the Royal Commission is in sight shows that it is intended to secure concessions regarding Sind and the Frontier province. The Abhyudaya remarks:—The Muslim offer regarding joint electorates evidently aims at securing certain communal concessions which it will be foolish of the Hindus to grant. If the attainment of Hindu-Muslim unity is dependent on the Hindus yielding to the communal demands of the Muslims we should bid good-bye to it. The resolutions passed at the Patna session of the Hindu Maha Sabha have made it clear that if the Muslims demand a price for unity and that too in the form of concessions to their community, the Hindus are under no circumstances prepared to pay that price. Referring to the attitude of the Hindu Maha Sabha regarding the Muslim proposal for joint electorates, the Medina writes:—The present Hindu-Muslim tension is not due to separate representation. The fact is that the Hindu community, realizing that it is under the aegis of the British Government and that British laws are supporting it, that it has money in its pockets and a few deceitful plans in its head has decided to challenge the Muslim civilization in India so that the Hindus may be able to avenge their slavery of a thousand years. The intention is either to expel the mlechha Muslims from India or to absorb them so as to wipe out their communal, religious, political and historical existence. This is not a new sentiment, but has asserted itself whenever Muslims have been found to be weak and has been responsible for shedding rivers of blood. The same mentality is at work at present. This is why the offer of unity and co-operation which was made by Muslims at the Delhi conference has been rejected by the Hindu Sabha. The Aziz-i-Hind is extremely glad to note that the whole country is protesting against the proposals of the Delhi Muslim conference regarding mixed representation and quoting the opinion of some Muslim leaders says that separate representation is necessary for Hindu-Muslim unity. The Muslim League should bid good-bye to the leadership of Mr. Jinnah and under some true leader who has sympathy with Islam should hold meetings in every town in support of separate representation. Otherwise on the arrival of the Royal Commission the rights of Muslims will be trampled under foot.

International Economic Conference.

The Leader supports the protest made by the Indian Merchants' Chamber of Bombay against the inclusion of only two Indians in the delegation to the forthcoming International Economic Conference and says:—If the authorities of the League of Nations consider the presence of India's representatives at the conference of sufficient importance to help them to achieve their object, and if the discussions at Geneva are regarded as being of any importance by the Government of India, surely it is Indian representatives who should be sent there. But not only in this instance but in selecting the personnel of the Indian delegation to other international gatherings also the Government of India have studiously disregarded Indian public opinion. Apart from the question whether a British representative will voice Indian opinion or British, it is derogatory to India's position that in a gathering of nations she should be represented by other than her own nationals. Writing in a similar strain the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—In the matter of all meetings held under the various bodies associated with the League of Nations, the Government of India appear to make their selections more with a view to British interest than to the interests of India. The Aj says that by the selection of Government officials and European traders as India's representatives it is shown to the world that her views are expressed in international conferences. But in reality they are the views of European traders. There is little hope that the protest of the Indian merchants of Bombay in this connexion to the authorities of the conference themselves will have any effect. The conference could not possibly consider the Indian protests in face of the opposition of the powerful British Government. The misfortune of India is that she is a subject country and still salt is sprinkled over her wounds by representing the views of her rulers as her own views.

Political propaganda.

The Aj says that whereas in olden times imperialism had put on a religious cloak to serve its ends, now it parades itself in the garb of civilization, but that in both the cases it has led to disastrous results. Now imperialism swears by the cant of trusteeship and self-government in subject countries, but does not hesitate to subject their inhabitants to unjustifiable firing and aerial bombing. As regards independent countries imperialism professes to protect their liberty, but spreads the net of railways therein and exploits their mineral resources under the pretext of enriching them. Thereafter armed forces are sent there for the defence of its own nationals and for the vindication of its rights and old treaties. This is the latest development in the form of imperialism. Readers know for themselves where these performances are being enacted. The paper publishes an article in which the editor refers to the dissensions among Hindus and Muslims which helped in fructifying the machinations of Clive and others in acquiring the sovereignty of Bengal and later on of the whole of India and says that similar practices were indulged in in Mesopotamia, Morocco and Philippines. Even now Hindu-Muslim dissensions are prolonging the subjection of India and both the communities are still engaged in strangling nationalism for the sake of temporary communal advantages. This has given an opportunity to a third party to exploit the country. Our eyes though opened do not yet completely open. Referring to the part played by young men in bringing about revolutions in Ireland, France, Russia and other countries, the Vartman takes the young men of India to task for not doing anything for their country and says:—They are not prepared to take a lesson even from their neighbour, China. They are afraid of dying for their country, their society and for their birth-rights. That is why they are unable to achieve anything. If our leaders feel for the country they ought to organize our young men.

Indian States.

The Muslim press continues to agitate against the externment of Dr. Kitchlew from the Indore State. The Sada-i-Muslim deplores the treatment accorded to the Muslims in some of the Hindu states and says that what happened at Indore is an earnest of the dangers which the Muslims will have to face in future in these states. Whatever arguments may be adduced in support of the explusion of Dr. Kitchlew from Indore State, it must be admitted that it is actuated by bigotry alone. It is the duty of the Government of India to take steps for the protection of the Muslims and to compel the Indore authorities, who are imbued with the Sangathanist spirit, to do justice to the Muslims. The Mashriq says that the order of the Agent to the Governor General, Central India, expelling Dr. Kitchlew from the Residency Bazar shows that the Agent has got no sympathy with the Muslims Is the Government powerless to turn out of India such a treacherous and mischievous man? The impression produced on the minds of eight crores of Muslims of India by the order is that the British nation is losing its administrative capacity. A nation lacking this quality is sure to lose its sovereignty. The position of the British Empire in India is unsafe if the British nation has begun to produce such rulers. The Jadu says that it has always been the policy of Government to favour Hindus and Muslims alternately and to crush the community that appears to be stronger than the other. This policy is the root cause of the Indore riot, and it is also in pursuance of this policy that Dr. Kitchlew has not been allowed to defend the cases of the oppressed Muslims.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

In the course of an impassioned article under the heading "Cup filled to the brim" the Chitrakot Ashram remarks:—For centuries past the Muslims have been practising atrocities upon the Hindus and the process still continues. If even the murder of thousands of persons has not satisfied their soul, let them perpetrate still more atrocities. What atrocity was left unpractised by the callous, knavish and treacherous Muhammad Ghori! The walling up of Guru Govind Singh's sons, the raising of the walls of mosques with the mortar of Hindu blood and the readiness to annihilate trusted servants of the state like Maharaj Jaswant Singh are events characterizing the Aurangzebian rule. The Hindu community has been enduring all this, but there seems to be no end to cowardly attacks on the part of the Muslims. Even today the Hindus are molested at several places. Hundreds of innocent persons are murdered and yet the Hindus keep quiet. The religious fanaticism of the Muslims is increasing day by day. The molesting of simple-minded Hindus has become a part of their daily routine. No day passes without the feelings of the Hindus being hurt under the cover of nimaz and roza. Hitherto only music accompanying Hindu marriage processions was stopped, but now objection is taken even to music accompanying national processions. Khwaja Hasan Nizami's scheme is at work everywhere and the goondas employed by him are busy seducing Hindu women and children. This is why we say that the cup of tyranny is getting filled to the brim. It is only a question of time when it topples down, because everything has a limit. It is yet time that the Muslims should cultivate fraternal relations with the Hindus, otherwise according to the law of nature they will have to suffer humiliation through their own deeds.

The Reforms.

In the course of two leading articles exhorting Muslims to make organized preparations for pressing their claims before the next Royal Commission on Reforms, the Medina writes:—There are fundamental, nay antagonistic, differences between the religions of Hindus and Muslims as a result of which both the communities have been reduced to slavery and helplessness. This is specially the case with Muslims whose empire, wealth, freedom and civilization have been considerably ruined by the Hindus with the help of foreigners. Today the angles of vision of Hindus and Muslims with regard to problems of life are different. Muslims think that their civilization, politics, history and traditions entitle them to special distinction among the various communities and they do not want to forego even a single right of theirs. Hindus, on the other hand, think that they are superior in numbers and wealth, that the country is theirs and that therefore the whole loaf belongs to them. For these reasons a violent conflict is going on between the two communities. When the poison of the Hindu Sabha has infected every Hindu, who can say that Hindus are prepared even for a moment to co-operate with the Muslims? The Hindu Sabha has ranged itself against the Muslims. They should therefore prepare for self-defence. The Hindus are sending their public men to England to press the claims of their community. The Muslims should also send a deputation of their leaders to safeguard their rights, otherwise the results will be disastrous.

Mr. S. C. Bose.

The Press is strongly urging the release of Mr. S. C. Bose in view of his illness. The Abhyudaya remarks that the detention of Mr. S. C. Bose in jail despite his protracted illness culminating in one of his lungs being affected is indicative of the Government's vindictive tendency. It is really inconceivable that the British Government which spends more than sixty crores of rupees annually on the military should be so much afraid of releasing a diseased political prisoner as if he would overthrow the British Government on his release. Mr. Bose's only crime is that he is a patriot and wishes well by his country and our benign Government wants that he should rot in jail until he is completely crippled and exhausted. By the protracted detention in jail of a cultured and respected person like Mr. Bose the Bengal Government is giving proof of its obduracy and shamelessness. To arrest on the basis of C. I. D. reports those whom the world considers to be innocent amounts to the murder of law and justice.

The Ramlila at Allahabad.

The Abhyudaya remarks:—Now that there are only a few months left it is the duty of the Hindus of Allahabad to wake up and make a determined effort to see that they are not deprived of the celebration of the Dasehra festival this year as well. The Dasehra procession will have to be taken out this year at all costs. An agitation for this should be carried on on the platform as well as in the Press. A memorial signed by the Hindu public of Allahabad should be submitted to the Governor and a committee should be appointed to devise means for securing the redress of the injustice done to the Hindus if all their constitutional efforts prove abortive.

Foreign affairs.

The Sudharak writes:—The foreign Powers are on the alert and are planning to crush the Chinese nationalists on the first opportunity that offers itself. If such a thing occurs Indians will be duty-bound not to help England in her unjust attack on China. On the other hand, they will demonstrate their sympathy with China by nursing her wounded and disabled soldiers and by praying for her victory. The Aj writes:—A perusal of the reports recently received regarding Hankow shows that the British publicity department is preparing public opinion for the bombardment of that town. There is nothing impossible for the existing British Government. Imperialists have sown seeds of discord among Chinese nationalists themselves by winning over Chiang-Kai-Shek. This being the case it will not be impossible to bombard Hankow. This may yield a temporary success to Britain, but it will turn the whole of the East into an enemy of her. In another issue the paper says:—The Government of India has interdicted the entry of nationalist reports from Hankow into India. On the one hand false, half-true and coloured reports are despatched from London, and on the other news direct from China is prohibited. This is one more instance of how we are kept in the dark and our men and money are being utilized in destroying another country. Our imperialistic rulers are not content with our physical slavery only, but want to impress our soul and intellect too into their slavery. In this, however, they cannot succeed. They can hide truth from us for a time, but this will increase our distrust of them and our whole-hearted sympathy will go to the Chinese struggling for their very existence. It is hoped that the Congress authorities will pay attention to the matter and try to arrange for the supply of correct news about China from Japan or some neutral European country. The Hamdam is ashamed to find that India is at present the greatest obstacle in the independence of China and says that fearing the inevitable reaction of Chinese independence on India, British politicians always devise fresh excuses for armed interference in the internal affairs of China. Britain will not leave China so long as she is not forced to do so. With the object of maintaining her hold on that country she is striving to provoke Russia to declare war on China.

Governor-Designate of the United Provinces.

The majority of newspapers continue to comment favourably on the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman as the next Governor of the United Provinces. The more extremist papers profess to view the appointment with indifference, remarking that in the existing constitution the personality of the Governor is not of much moment. The Aligarh Mail writes:—We are fortunate in having Sir Alexander Muddiman as our satrap He has a vast range of knowledge and experience of Indian administration and has been a very successful Home Member of the Central Government. We have no doubt that the administrative acumen which he has acquired during his 30 years' service in India will stand him in good stead in being at the helm of our affairs. He is thus eminently fitted to govern the heart of Hindustan, the United Provinces, in these troublous times, and we believe that a better Governor than him could not be chosen in the present circumstances. The Hitaishi remarks: -In the existing circumstances it is immaterial to us whether the Governor appointed is an I. C. S man or a public man from Britain or a subject Indian. They may hold different views, but they follow one and the same policy as required by the existing system of government. Our agitation should not, therefore, be directed against the appointment of particular individuals, but against the system of administration which guides their actions. The Pratap also expresses similar views. The Medina says:—Those who understand the mysteries of the Western modes of administration know that individuals do not count in it. Every officer adapts himself to the existing circumstances. So long as the constitution remains unchanged there can be no change in the policy and methods of government whether the Governor be Sir Alexander Muddiman or Sir William Marris. The Haq says that in view of his popularity as the leader of the Assembly, it would have rejoiced over the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman if he had not been a limb of the "steel frame" whose iron grip has been heavily felt by all those who have had to deal with it. However, now that the appointment has been announced it may be hoped that in spite of his being a member of the I. C. S., Sir Alexander will succeed in restoring amity and good-will in the province by satisfying the needs of the people. The Aziz-i-Hind regrets that the Governorship of this province has this time gone to a civilian of Bihar, and not to one of this province. The Azad congratulates the Government and the people of the United Provinces on the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman and hopes that his régime will prove successful in every way. The Mashriq congratulates Sir Alexander Muddiman on his appointment and says:—The courteous treatment which Sir Alexander accorded to Indians in the Assembly shows that his régime will be peaceful and pleasant. The India says that when under the existing system of government personality does not count for anything, the appointment of a statesman like Sir Alexander is just and proper. It hopes that he will prove to be a good Governor and remove the sufferings of the Maharaja of Nabha.

Hindu Mahasabha.

Muslim papers continue to comment strongly on Dr. Moonje's presidential address at the Patna session of the Hindu Mahasabha. The Hindi Kesri holds the session to be a glorious success and commends the President's advice regarding mixed electorates. It says:—Muslims have abused their excessive powers in the matter of representation by supporting Government in connexion with its exchange policy and protection of the steel industry and thereby established their own incompetence. After such an experience no community can ever trust them. In the course of an article denouncing the attitude of the Hindu Mahasabha towards the Muslim proposal regarding joint electorates the Medina writes:—The presidential address and the fiery speeches of the Hindu leaders of the foremost rank at the Patna session of the Mahasabha were instinct with the desire to defame the Muslims. The blind and narrow-minded Hindu leaders of Northern India have rendered the atmosphere so foul that it may soon lead to general lawlessness, massacre and plunder. There was no resolution which was not intended to wound the feelings of Muslims, and there was no proposal which was not calculated to consign India to the fire of Nimrod. The Mahasabha is based on hatred, enmity and bigotry. It is, therefore, not at all surprising if it rejected, with the utmost cruelty, the Muslim offer of friendship and of joint electorates. Not only that. It has put forward counter-proposals which are extremely vague, meaningless and crafty. The Muslims of India should realize that it is vain to expect any pact or compromise with Hindus. This humiliation has now become intolerable. The Najat says that Dr. Moonje's address was a violent outburst of Hindu mentality, falsehood and misrepresentation. It can only accentuate the communal tension and incite Hindus and Muslims to break one another's heads more than ever. In supporting sangathan and shuddhi movements his real aim was to rouse the Hindus so that they might subdue the Muslims anyhow. The Aina says that the principle of mixed representation can never be accepted in India at the present juncture when there is so much of communal tension in the country. The views of Dr. Moonje and other Hindu leaders, expressed in the Hindu Mahasabha, show that they do not attach any value to Muslim co-operation, and want to achieve their communal ends with the strength of their own numbers. If, therefore, the principle of mixed representation is accepted the result will be that either there will be no Muslims in the legislatures, or, if there are any, they will merely echo the Hindu sentiments. Referring to Dr. Moonje's remark that Hindu-Muslim unity is not at all necessary for the freedom of India the Anis says:—Is it possible that the party which regards the Muslims to be a negligible factor in its politics will have any regard for their rights or make any sacrifice for their sake?

Political propaganda.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Why is it that China, which began to yearn for national existence almost at the same time with India, has made much more headway than India? . . . . The secret is in the mass movement. The Chinese labourer is harnessed to the national movement, whereas in India we are still debating on the subject. Referring to the agitation against the appointment of an Indian medical man at the Eden Hospital, Calcutta, the paper writes:—By their agitation over the Eden Hospital appointment Europeans in India will only be dredging the racial gulf dividing the rulers and the ruled and showing the mockery of India ever being spontaneously led to Swaraj. The Aj refers to the combination of imperialistic powers for the domination of the world and says: It is our duty to co-operate with all those countries which are striving for self-preservation and emancipation and make friends of those persons in imperialistic countries who have determined to exterminate capitalism and militarist domination. We trust that the All-India Congress Committee, in its Bombay meeting on the 15th May, will give due consideration to Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru's report in connexion with the International Oppressed Nationalities Conference and will affiliate the Congress to that international body. In another issue, commending the declaration of the Conference regarding the ancient friendly relations between India and China the paper writes:—If Buddhist China and India become once more bound in ties of friendship they will create a force sufficiently powerful to counter the strongest combination of imperialism. Every educated Indian should give earnest consideration to this question. The Pratap publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap from Rega in the course of which he says:—We must not rely much on the promises of our Russian friends. We shall have to cultivate self-help . . . I am convinced that our movement is now gaining universal sympathy . . . The present Chinese revolution holds out a definite assurance of the emancipation of the oppressed nations. The freedom of India is coming. God is striving for it. It is our duty to concentrate all our energies on the attainment of the freedom, happiness and peace of 33 crores of Indians and to co-operate with that Divine power in this matter. In the course of an impassioned leading article, under the caption "Slices of Heart," the Vartman refers to the "inhuman" treatment meted out to Messrs. Subhas Chandra Bose and Sachindranath Sanyal and other "brilliant" Indian youths in jails and remarks:—The heart of humanity is being rent asunder. The soul of kind-heartedness is dying out. The sway of righteousness is coming to an end. The ship of religion is sinking. If we hear all this our heart trembles, our liver begins to throb, and our body becomes horripilated. We have heard and read stories connected with the Mutiny. We recollect how people were suspended from trees and hanged, how they were pierced with bayonets and suspended, and how villages were burnt wholesale. But even on hearing and reading these stories we never experienced that excitement, pain, poignancy, indignation, rage and depression which we are feeling at present . . . Who knows whether these Indian youths were on the right path or we? Who knows whether India will attain her emancipation through non-violent revolution or by bloody means? Neither do we know that freedom will be attained only by the combination of peace and blood . . . . But in which civilized country and under which system of government are anarchists or those who adopt white or red means for the emancipation of their country put to brutal tortures? We ask this question of those limbs of the Government who in the name of the safety of administration and order are allowing the enactment of this brutal tragedy and are mocking at our helplessness. Let those moderates who held that co-operation with the British Empire would protect them witness the terrible sacrifice of the budding youths of India. Let those ministers and members who boasted of establishing the power of India by making the Reforms a success go inside the jails and see how the slices of our heart are smarting and writhing under unbearable pain and are struggling in the jaws of death. The British Government has become so terrible, so irresponsible, so fearless, and so autocratic that we cannot raise our voice. Let us at least protest against this inhumanity and unite to stop this tyranny.

The Bengal detenus.

In the course of an article vehemently protesting against the attitude of the Government towards the Bengal detenus, the Vartman writes:—Some of the detenus are in a critical condition, yet the Government does not budge an inch. After all, is there any reason for such callousness, heartlessness and barbarity? The fact is that by thus harassing these men the Government wants to terrorize the people in general. In the name of suppressing conspirators it wants to crush Indian national life itself. Such methods may change the feelings even of those persons who wish to remain under the ægis of the British Empire. These are signs of the impending downfall of the Empire. The British statesmen are foolish if they want to rule by trampling upon the heart of India, and the future will show that their policy is suicidal. Commenting on the terms of release offered to Mr. S. C. Bose the Pratap remarks:—Are these terms characterized by generosity or reprehensible diplomacy? The petty-mindedness of the bureaucracy is well known. It thinks that by releasing Mr. Bose its prestige will suffer. How foolish and callous the officials are! One Manohar Pant, writing in the editorial columns of the Shakti, refers to the growing deterioration in the health of the Bengal detenus caused by their protracted confinement in jail and remarks:—The children of Jesus Christ have earned notoriety for their brutality. What must the soul of that ascetic be saying at finding that his disciples have lost even a human heart in this twentieth century? The death of Mr. Shiva Shanker Chakravarty, an internee, in a hospital at Bhowanipore, is an example of the callousness of the bureaucracy. The bureaucracy is ruthlessly sacrificing one by one the noble sons of India. Armed with various weapons our civilized Government wants to strengthen the foundation of the British Empire by ruining the health of about a hundred and fifty unarmed and dependent Indian youths. In these circumstances God only knows how long our just Government will continue to exist. The Oudh Akhbar exhorts the British Government and the Government of India to release Mr. Subhas Chander Bose and says that it is the height of cowardice to apprehend the disruption of the British Empire from an individual specially when his health is so shattered.

The Kakori dacoity case.

The Pratap complains that the condition of the Kakori convicts is getting worse every day, and in the name of justice, humanity and civilization appeals to the authorities to treat them as political prisoners and to accord special treatment to them. Commenting on the judgment in the Kakori dacoity case the Desh Bhagat writes:—It was vain for us to expect anything else from a just judge of a foreign Government because there is a world of difference between our angle of vision and theirs. They think that it is their natural right to bind Indians in the chains of subjection, treat them like cats and dogs, and humiliate and disgrace them; while those who long for India's emancipation think that no foreigner has any right to rule over this country. Englishmen, who are our masters to-day, are ruling over us with the help of the policy of divide and rule. Did these patriots deserve such severe sentences? Britain wants to keep us in subjection and to crush the spirit of liberty in our young men. Our conviction, however, is that this spirit cannot be crushed even by hanging the patriots, Ram Prasad, Rajendra Nath Lahiri and Roshan Singh, and sooner or later India will produce a party whose object will be to emancipate her from foreign subjection. We deem it our duty to tell the Government frankly that if it really wants to establish peace and order in India and purge the country of revolutionary organizations the only means to achieve this end is to grant self-government to the people for otherwise it is impossible to get rid of anarchical organizations even by means of death sentences and sentences of transportation for life. There is still time for the British Government to act with foresight and give up its old policy of repression. The Pariwartan writes:—The Kakori dacoity case shows that when those who want to see India a free country cannot break the chain of her subjection in spite of all their peaceful efforts and find the steel claw strong and the heart of the bureaucracy unsympathetic, they resort to such extraordinary practices.

Music before Mosques.

The Medina takes the Muslims of Pabna severely to task for agreeing to the compromise regarding the question of music before mosques and says:—The compromise permits music before mosques even during prayers if the procession happens to be religious or mourning. This means that Muslims have themselves renounced their right for which they bore the rigours of jail and sacrificed their lives. All these sacrifices have gone in vain. What scruple can the Hindus have in proclaiming a non-religious procession as a religious one? It is not difficult to imagine what will happen after this compromise. Hindus will take out a religious or mourning procession every day. Muslims will refuse to regard it as such. Hindus will insist. It is easy to conceive how this will lead to breach of peace and order. In short, instead of stopping disturbances it will open the way for them. The Pabna Muslims had no right to enter into a compromise which will embarrass the entire Muslim community of India. The Sach reproduces an extract from the letter of a "very famous pirzada" (a Muslim saint) of Oudh to the effect that when the Muslims themselves play music before mosques during the Muharram processions and their women enter the mosques playing on drums, they should not prevent the Hindus from doing so and says that the pirzada is quite right in saying that the shara does not allow the Muslims to cause bloodshed over the question of music before mosques under a non-Muslim Government.

Communal representation.

Criticizing the resolutions passed at the general meeting of the Punjab Provincial Muslim League and the Presidential address of Sir Muhammad Shafi, which "sought to throw the entire responsibility for the Muslims' unwillingness to give up separate electorates on the shoulders of Hindu leaders and the Hindu Mahasabha," the Leader writes:—The real truth is that the Muslims do not want to give up separate electorates. One of the resolutions passed at the League meeting denied that separate communal electorates were responsible for Hindu-Muslim dissensions. This is merely flying in the face of patent facts. The fault for these dissensions, of course, lies with the movement for the consolidation of the Hindu community and for the eradication of the numerous social ills from which it suffers. So long as the Muslims maintain such a suspicious and hostile attitude towards the great reformative movement of the Hindus, there is little hope of mutual understanding . . . The intolerance which the Muslims have been betraying in numerous places has been only strengthening the determination of the Hindus to organize themselves to protect their rights and liberties. Referring to the opposition against the proposals of the conference of Muslim leaders held at Delhi regarding joint electorates the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—It gives us acute pain that we cannot compose our differences by a display of friendly feelings and good-will and we are constrained to appeal to Lord Irwin to step into the breach and to find a solution of the difficult problem which confronts the nation and has endangered the peace and tranquillity of the country. Let His Excellency call a round-table conference in Simla when the Legislative Assembly meets there, and invite leaders of Hindu and Muslim thought to sit together and discuss proposals for communal settlement. The decision thus arrived at may be placed before the Royal Commission on reforms with a view to guide them in framing their proposals. If His Excellency does this he will earn the gratitude of the whole of India.

The Arya Samaj.

Commenting on the suggestion made in the Times of India by a correspondent that the activities of the Arya Samaj are the root cause of the Hindu-Muslim riots and that it should, therefore, be suppressed, the Leader writes:—Talk of suppression of the Arya Samaj or any other religious body of that kind is mere futility for the suppression is certain to be followed by such an agitation as has, perhaps, not been witnessed in India since the Mutiny. The Arya Samaj cannot be suppressed. It will not allow itself to be suppressed. The real necessity is the rigid observance of strict impartiality by Governments and their officers, the protection of rights of citizenship and able and efficient administration. Given these conditions there will be far fewer of communal riots. Without them the situation will not improve: it may grow from bad to worse. The Abhyudaya remarks:—It is not for the first time that the Arya Samaj has become the target of the wrath of the Anglo-Indian Press and the Government. But the days have gone when a strong organization like that of the Arya Samaj could be crushed. Indeed, we would welcome the acceptance of the fatuous suggestion of the Times of India by the Government because we know that any such attempt on the part of the Government is foredoomed to failure and is bound to strengthen the Arya Samaj. We wish that the Government may commit such a mistake and bear its consequences.

The United Provinces Supplementary Budget.

Commenting upon the supplementary United Provinces budget the Aj opposes the demand of additional grant for police expenditure on the ground that it is to be utilized for increasing the strength of the police force and for providing comforts to high officials. The paper also takes exception to the demand of extra grants for the Lucknow and the Allahabad universities on the plea that expenditure on higher education only increases unemployment and leads to the waste of the money and energy of youths, and urges that all available money should be utilized in imparting industrial and technical education so as to provide new independent avenues of employment. It complains that when the Lucknow and the Allahabad universities are being thus pampered there is no reason why the provincial Government should be so indifferent to the needs of the Benares University, and advises the members of the Council not to sanction these grants unless substantial amounts of money are provided by the Education Minister for the Benares and the Aligarh universities also. It protests against the additional grant to European schools, and says that the expenditure on European schools is altogether out of proportion to the expenditure on education for Indians. It insists that the grant intended for the secondary schools should be utilized in improving the lot of the teachers instead of being wasted on buildings.

The Nagpur Satyagrah.

The Vartman pays a tribute to the heroic and patriotic spirit of those young men of Nagpur who are resorting to passive resistance to secure the release of the Bengal detenus and says:—While people in other parts have remained content with lip sympathy with the Bengal detenus, these young men of Nagpur are not afraid even of death in striving for their desired end. They have decided to violate the Arms Act to make the bureaucracy eat the humble pie. They have preferred to violate the law under which the irresponsible bureaucracy does not hesitate to grind down these young men of Bengal. The Pratap remarks:—We may congratulate the Nagpur satyagrahis on their zeal, but we cannot approve of their action at present. The local Congress workers are themselves sceptical about the efficacy of this satyagrah. We would, therefore, urge Mr. Mancharsha Avari and his brave followers not to add to the series of national defeats by starting another satyagrah at present.

The League of Nations.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The League of Nations is a colossal hoax calculated to perpetuate the military basis of international existence, although we are asked to believe in its pious intentions of establishing peace and good-will among the nations of the world. It is a loose cohesion of a few European nations meeting periodically to indulge in tawdry discussions and futile confabulations about airy ideals of world peace and total disarmament, while each nation with inveterate zeal is strengthening itself as if in preparation for a mighty undeclared war.

The Hindu Sansar defamation case.

The Aj remarks that the decisions of the appellate courts in the Pratap and the Hindu Sansar defamation cases will be remembered long for even-handed justice in the province. If justice is dispensed in this manner there is no doubt that law courts will gain popular confidence. The duties of a journalist are very difficult in themselves and if the courts were not to decide defamation cases impartially, taking into account the good motives of the accused, not only would they themselves suffer in prestige but side by side with injury to public interests the administration, too, would deteriorate more and more and lead to ever-increasing dissatisfaction among the people.

Indian States.

The Aziz-i-Hind invites the attention of the Government to the state of affairs in Bharatpur and says:—The creditors have not yet been paid anything. They are anxiously looking up to the British Government for justice. The poor servants of the State have also not received their salaries for the last several months. If instead of spending money in entertaining Hindu leaders the Maharaja repays the creditors people would be satisfied to some extent, but the Maharaja holds the propitiation of Hindu leaders and subservience to Simla officials to be the sole means of his salvation, and, so long as he does not increase the powers of the diwan and curtail his expenditure, there can be no improvement in the present condition of the State.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the frequent outrages on Hindu women the Vartman suggests that they should carry knives and daggers on their person to protect themselves from immoral persons and rogues belonging to other religions. Women should be imbued with the spirit of self-respect and self-help so that they may be able to save their honour.

Foreign affairs.

The Aj tries to make out that the Northern Chinese and not the Chinese nationalists were responsible for the outrages on foreigners at Nanking and says that the coloured accounts of those ordinary outrages were the outcome of a pre-concerted plan to incite the world against China. But America and Japan have come to know the true facts now, and it is possible that in view of their unwillingness to participate in coercive measures, British imperialists also may have some consideration for dictates of justice and may refrain from excessive interference in Chinese affairs. In another article the same paper strongly criticizes the Trade Union Bill and says: The Bill is an instrument for unscrupulously oppressing labourers and shows that the land which was called the mother of liberty is moving under the influence of capitalistic and imperialistic greed. When law itself begins to oppress the people revolution becomes an absolute necessity for self-preservation. In view of such an attitude of England, the cradle of constitutional agitation, one is driven to say that there will be a very terrible revolution throughout the world before the existing capitalistic era is supplanted by a new era. It appears that a conflict between Bolshevism and Fascism has become inevitable now.

The Lahore riots.

Comments on the Lahore riots are generally on communal lines. Extremist papers insinuate that the authorities deliberately refrained from adopting preventive measures. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The ghastly tragedy enacted at Lahore with so much loss of innocent lives ought to open the eyes of Hindus and Muslims to the serious nature of the present tension between the two sister communities which threatens to envelop the whole of India in the flames of a civil war. For, as things go, the soldiery is by no means immune from its pernicious influence. The inflammable material, so stupidly disseminated through the columns of communal newspapers finds its way into the barracks of the sepoys and poisons their unsophisticated minds. The exaggerated stories of communal vengeance and atrocities inflame their passions so that unless immediate steps are taken both by leaders of public opinion and by Government to cement these differences and to promote a better understanding, the whole country will be in the grip of a civil war which British bayonets and machine-guns may not be able to quell. We are afraid Hindus and Muslims are equally to blame in regard to the blood-thirsty attitude which they have adopted towards each other. The "divide and rule" policy of the alien bureaucracy may be moving the strings behind the scenes. But the first and foremost blame attaches to communal newspapers which inflame the passions of the multitude and goad them to crime. The real leaders like Gandhi have retired in disgust and despair. The dregs of society have come to the top by playing to the galleries and pandering to public taste for blood. We repeat our appeal to Lord Irwin to step into the breach and bridge the gulf which yawns before us. The Vartman takes the Lahore authorities to task for not taking timely steps to quell the disturbance and says: The responsibility for all that happened after the funeral of the Muslim lies on the shoulders of the police. We are not sure that the disturbance will not appear in another form. It is, therefore, the duty of the Punjab Government to transfer Muslim police officers and appoint Christian, Parsi or British officers in their place, and take adequate precautionary measures for the future. Writing in a similar strain the Sainik says: If it be urged that the authorities were unaware that a conflagration was imminent then it must be said that the Criminal Investigation department was either incompetent or negligent. If it be said that the authorities knew everything then did they deliberately refrain from taking preventive measures? No one can believe that even if the Government had so wished it could not have prevented the disturbance. Then may it be assumed that the Government's inaction was deliberate? If there is even an iota of truth in either of these suppositions then the Government cannot be absolved from its responsibility. The Aj says that it is not enough to restore peace and order with the help of the police and the military. The root cause of the communal tension which is more political than religious in nature, should first be removed. The Medina lays stress on the fact that Muslims were attacked by Sikhs with their kripans the carrying of which has been permitted by law and says: According to our Lahore contemporaries these armed Sikhs were accompanied by a crowd of Hindus with lathis and their slogan was "kill and don't care." Prior to this the stalwarts of Rithala had, with the cry "kill even if lakhs of rupees are spent," attacked the unwary Muslims of that place. Now the Muslims of Lahore, who were absorbed in their prayers, have been welcomed with this very slogan. Does this not show that in the Government established by law it has now become permissible for the blood-thirsty Hindus and Sikhs to kill the Muslims? Should Muslims even now not come to the conclusion that the British Government has also resolved to make India too hot for them in order to purge the country of those who are ready to sacrifice their lives for the sake of nationalism and freedom. The Lahore incident has shown that the Sikhs have abused the kripans. It is, therefore, the religious duty of the Muslim members of the Punjab Council to see to it that either the Muslims are allowed to possess swords or the Sikhs also are deprived of the privilege of keeping kripans. The Hamdam deplores that the communal tension has involved the Sikh community also and urges the need for a round table conference of the Hindu, Muslim and Sikh leaders. In another article, the paper takes the Asscciated Press severely to task for circulating misleading reports about the origin of the Lahore riots and deplores that on account of the mischievous activities of the Hindu sangathanists the Sikhs of Lahore soiled their hands with the Muslim blood and disgraced their own religion by abusing the kripans. In a third article the same paper says that though it was but natural for the Muslims to get excited at the sight of the dead bodies of their co-religionists yet they had no right to take the law into their own hands and their action in assaulting the unarmed passers-by can never be justified. The Najat writes: These riots show that the turbulent section of the Hindu community is striving in every way to humiliate and ruin the Muslims. The joint attack of the Hindu and Sikh ruffians on Muslims engaged in their prayers in a mosque, the encouragement given to the rioters by two Sikh sepoys, and the pelting of stones on the funeral procession by educated Hindus in a military centre where the Government is equipped with all its strength shows that all this was a deliberate effort to put to test the forbearance of the Muslim community and challenge the might of the Government. The Bedar warns the Hindus not to provoke the Muslims and says: We are not advocates of mischief and hooliganism, but when we are impelled to protect and propagate our religion we can rule Spain for seven hundred years, attack the temple of Somnath, spurn its jewels and become idol-breakers. The Haqiqat deplores the communal riots and says: If the situation does not improve, what can be expected of the Reforms Commission?

Governor-Designate of the United Provinces.

Favourable comments on the appointment of Sir Alexander Muddiman continue to appear in the Press. The Wealth and Welfare writes: In Sir Alexander Muddiman the provinces will have a Governor who has a specially intimate knowledge of the principles which have actuated Parliament in launching the great experiment. He should be successful in dissipating the doubts and uncertainty which have clouded the atmosphere in the province. The Himalayan Times says: Sir Alexander Muddiman is one of those few who have managed to maintain their individual integrity even when identifying themselves with sun-dried bureaucrats. His ready wit, genial temperament and engaging frankness, are some of the outstanding ornaments of his attainments. He is coming to the United Provinces with an unbiassed mind and it is principally for this reason that his appointment is hailed with hopeful anticipation by every section of Indian communities in these provinces. We hope his tactful and sympathetic attention will facilitate a popular administration and endear him to the people of these provinces. The Surya writes: If a Governor had to be selected from the ranks of the Indian Civil Service no better choice could have been made, as personally Sir Alexander is a very good man. Though disappointed to find that a civilian has again been appointed Governor of the United Provinces, the Sadaqat congratulates Sir Alexander Muddiman on his appointment on personal grounds, and hopes that the province will progress during his régime.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Leader writes : Sir Abdur Rahim's presidential address at the Bengal Provincial Muslim Conference held at Barisal struck a less blatant communal note than his Aligarh performance, but the spirit which informed it was the same. The Hindu feeling in Bengal is very much exercised over the outrages that are being committed on Hindu women by Muslim miscreants. The Bengal papers are full of reports of criminal assaults committed on them, sometimes of the most daring and brutal nature. Muslim leaders have failed to condemn them and Sir Abdur Rahim's remarks show that he does not take a serious view of the dastardly and detestable deeds of his co-religionists in these matters and instead of condemning them has tried to explain them away. He has in fact attacked the Hindus for making a communal grievance of abductions of Hindu women by Muslims. He insinuated as if the aim of the Hindus was to dominate over Muslims while he declared on behalf of his community that it " was not within the scope of its ambition to dominate other communities." Has there been no talk of a Muslim Raj? The Aligarh Mail writes : The riot that occurred at Rithala would reveal even to the meanest intelligence the Hindu Prussianism. Unfortunately the Muslims are generally blamed for starting trouble, but there is an example of Hindu high-handedness and aggression of which the knowledge has been made public not by any Muslim agency, but by the Associated Press of India which can hardly be biassed in favour of the Muslims. The Abhyudaya writes : Lala Lajpat Rai's suggestion regarding the appointment of a committee to enquire into the causes of communal disturbances deserves to be considered, but we have no hope that the Government will act on it. Why should it institute an inquiry into the causes of the communal disturbances when it stands to gain by such disturbances. The Aj attributes the communal disturbances in the country to the hesitation of the Indian leaders in laying down a clear and unequivocal definition of Swaraj and remarks that those who are evading this question are creating new difficulties. The organization of one community against the other, and the policy to enter into hollow agreements are calculated to accentuate the existing communal tension rather than allay it. True remedy consists in an unambiguous definition of Swaraj by the Congress. The Surya remarks : The desire in certain political circles to seek the help of Afghanistan in driving out the British from India is as notorious as the action of Jaychand in calling in the assistance of Muhammad Ghori. Its ultimate object is the establishment of Muslim rule in India. The means by which and the price at which Mahatma Gandhi and other Congress leaders want to attain Swaraj are fatal to the Hindus. Hindus love Hinduism more than Swaraj. It should be the duty of every Hindu to think first in terms of the community and then in terms of the nation. The Hamdam takes Lala Lajpat Rai to task for remarking to a representative of the Free Press that the present Hindu-Muslim tension is the outcome of the secret propaganda of Muslims and says that the tension really owes its origin to the movements of shuddhi and sangathan which were inaugurated with the object of laying the foundations of a Hindu raj in India. The present atmosphere of the Punjab can be purged of the deadly germs of communalism only if the leading Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs of that province make a confession of their errors and sincerely strive to save it from the terrible consequences of a civil war.

Communal representation.

The Pratap writes: One may admire the dexterity displayed by Sir Muhammad Shafi in trying to prove in the course of his presidential address at the Punjab session of the Muslim League that the Hindus were responsible for the rejection of the Muslim offer about joint electorates, but his arguments were unconvincing. It is well known that a section of the Muslims had expressed strong disapproval of the offer before any expression of opinion on this question was forthcoming from the Hindu leaders. Besides the offer was in the nature of an ultimatum to which the Hindus were asked to submit at the point of the pistol which rendered even its examination by the Hindu leaders impossible. The Anand remarks that the conditions attached to the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates demand greater sacrifices of the Hindus. If the offer is to prove workable it should be divested of those conditions. The All-India Congress Committee should, before accepting the offer, examine it in detail and take care that it does not arrive at any decision which may prove prejudicial to the interests of the Hindu community. The Adalat warns the Muslims against the offer made by their leaders at Delhi regarding joint electorates, and says that in order to achieve their selfish ends Mr. Jinnah and his friends are bent upon jeopardising the rights of the Muslim community. Al Burid is gratified to note that the Punjab Muslim League has refused to accept the principle of joint electorates and sarcastically thanks the Hindu Mahasabha and press for opening the eyes of the Muslims by spurning the Delhi proposal of Muslim leaders. The Medina regrets that the League has acted hastily in declaring that separate representation is absolutely necessary for the Muslims of that province and says that it would have been better if it had waited for the decision of the Congress in this matter.

Political propaganda.

The Indian Daily Telegraph attributes the present "exhausted spirit of the country" to the selfishness of the leaders and says: When the sons of the soil are groaning under the tyranny of the bureaucracy and the oppression of petty officials, the leaders sit in ministerial chairs as members of that bureaucracy and scoff at their sufferings. How can they inspire confidence in the masses, how can they expect the country to follow at their bidding? So long as this wrangle for posts, for self-glorification, for self-aggrandisement lasts, they will not get the country to follow them blindly. The country has no more money, no more effort to enrich them. Let them pay their debt to their country now, start afresh with non-cooperation and civil disobedience and use all other offensive and defensive weapons in their quiver and the country will follow. Under the heading "Barindra, the priest of red sacrifice," the Abhyudaya publishes a sketch of the life of Barindra Kumar Ghosh (the leader in the Manicktalla conspiracy case) in which the writer makes the following introductory remarks:—Barindra is one of those great patriots who have surrendered themselves in the service of the motherland, whose hearts always sing to the glory of their native land, and who enter into the battle of life not as so-called Yogis, but as true men of action. The ideal patriotism of which he has given a brilliant example by a life-long service of the motherland is indescribable. Although the Aj approves of the proposal of Mr. V. J. Patel to attend the meetings of the Parliaments of various European countries and thereby enrich his experience it views with disfavour his interviews with Lord Birkenhead and other officials as it regards them as mere waste of time. The Vartman is glad that a branch of the Indian Volunteers' Association (Seva Dal) has been established at Cawnpore and exhorting young men to join it, says: For the success of the national agitation we want at least two lakhs of volunteers who may be prepared to go to jail or even to die in the service of the country. It was the want of an adequate number of such volunteers which caused the failure of the non-cooperation movement. What a handful of such volunteers can do has been demonstrated at Nagpur.

Shivaji's tercentenary.

Hindu papers publish impassioned articles and poems on the life of Shivaji. The Himalayan Times writes: Let us draw our inspiration from Shivaji's life and get no more lost in the labyrinth of Council debates and Assembly discussions and deluding resolutions and sundry amendments. We should depute the best among us to the villages and make the villages self-sufficient units of national solidarity. Let us raise the pitch of self-sacrifice and suffering for the nation's cause, which will wipe out cheap leadership and prepare the atmosphere for sterling men of Shivaji's ideals. This will keep alive the memory of Shivaji as nothing else can. The Shakti pays a glowing tribute to Shivaji for the services rendered by him in the cause of Hinduism by having brought about the disruption of an unjust foreign rule and remarks that although he rose up from the position of an ordinary soldier to that of a commander and a king yet had he lived to-day under the British Government he would not have risen up to a rank higher than that of a Major Subedar. The Agra Samachar says: The celebration throughout the country of the tercentenary of Shivaji, who is described in Indian history, and particularly in the book which has been prescribed by the Education department of the Local Government for use in the primary schools of these provinces, as an assassin, plunderer and free-booter, shows that India is advancing towards the attainment of a great and high ideal. May India produce not one or two but hundreds and thousands of such assassins and free-booters who are pained by the miseries of their countrymen, who are true aspirants after freedom and who delight in suffering tortures of hell as free men rather than to be bound in the chains of slavery. The Hamdam says that Pandit Malaviya's message that not only the Hindus but also the Indian Muslims, Christians and Jews ought to celebrate Shivaji's tercentenary shows that he takes special delight in wounding the feelings of the Muslims. Can any Muslim think of celebrating the centenary of a rebel who took part in overthrowing the Muslim empire? A perusal of what both Hindu and Muslim historians have written about Shivaji shows that he does not deserve the honour which Pandit Malaviya wants to be bestowed on him.

Hindu Mahasabha.

The Muslim press continues to comment strongly on the attitude of the Hindu Mahasabha towards the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates. The Medina says: The cunning, deceit and bigotry displayed in the second part of the resolution of the Mahasabha on the Muslim offer beat hollow thousands of trickeries of the western capitalist. In spurning the Muslim offer in this way the Mahasabha wants to accentuate the present communal tension so that it may lead to Hindu raj and it may be possible to drive out mleccha Muslims from India or to keep them enslaved. We would invite the attention of our co-religionists to this decision of the Mahasabha and ask them what has become of their unity and brotherhood and whether in addition to remaining slaves of the Government they want to live to serve the Hindus also? In another article it says that in appointing a committee for chalking out a programme in consultation with various sub-sections of the Hindu community, the Mahasabha wants to usurp the functions of the Congress and become a dictatorial body in the country. For the shamelessness with which it has caused the death of political life, kindled the fire of bigotry, hatred and animosity and accentuated communal tension the Mahasabha deserves to be totally ignored by leading men of the country and the Muslims. The Muslims ought to make an honourable agreement with the Congress and after creating a pleasant atmosphere in the country show that they are far more patriotic than the wicked children of the Mahasabha. Al Burid says that the decision of the Hindu Mahasabha regarding the Muslim offer reveals the Hindu mentality in its true colours and shows that by mixed electorates the Hindus mean that the Muslims should always remain in their bondage along with that of Englishmen.

Reforms.

The Aj deprecates the importance which Indian politicians are attaching to the forthcoming Royal Commission on Reforms and says:—We do not approve of any political effort the success of which depends upon foreigners. No country has so far achieved freedom through constitutional agitation. We hold that we shall get Swaraj only when it is brought home to our rulers that it is injurious to their own interests to rule over this country with physical force and that it is to their advantage to make a friend of it by granting it Swaraj. This task can be accomplished not by constitutional agitation but by the independent efforts of Indians themselves. We had some proof of this in the non-cooperation days. The country can be immensely benefited if the time and energy wasted in bringing about compacts and making a display of debating talents in the legislative bodies are utilized in organizing labourers and peasants. The agreement which is being sought to be arrived at between Hindus and Muslims in order to place one single scheme before the Royal Commission will not last long and will share the fate of the Lucknow pact. It would be much better if the Congress leaders could forget the Commission and engaged themselves in constructive work. This will surely do good and it is possible that their indifference based on self-reliance will have greater effect on the Commission than their subservient eagerness to co-operate with it.

The Arya Samaj.

Hindu papers take strong exception to the suggestion of the Times of India regarding the suppression of the Arya Samaj. The Arya Mittra writes:—This suggestion of the Times of India has created a sensation in the Arya Samajist world. It appears that the editor of the Times has lost his head otherwise he would not have offered such a fatuous suggestion which betrays his utter ignorance of the position and the strength of the Arya Samaj. The Kailash insinuates that the suggestion in the Times of India was inspired by a Muslim and takes the editor of the paper to task for having commented favourably thereon. It remarks: The Arya Samajists are Hindus and we are entirely with them. The Arya Samajists and the Sangathanists are inseparable. Not only the Arya Samajists but the entire Hindu community is interested in the Shuddhi moment. Shuddhi is indispensable and it is an infallible weapon of the Hindus. In no circumstances can this movement be given up now. Supporting the suggestion of the Times of India, Al Burid says that the Government should not only investigate the allegations against the Samaj but should also try to find out what hand the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements have in disturbing the peace of the country and then, if it finds that the Arya Samaj is at the bottom of all this it should not hesitate in the least to suppress it.

Education in the United Provinces.

Commenting on the educational report of the United Provinces for the year 1925-26, the Aj remarks:—In view of the number of students receiving education in these provinces and the expenditure incurred per head in their education we are driven to the conclusion that if the expenditure goes on increasing in this ratio we will have to give up all hopes of a wide diffusion of education in these provinces. Money is being unnecessarily spent on administration, inspection, buildings and university education. The kind of education imparted in the universities these days is altogether unsuitable for enabling its recipients to earn a livelihood and the money spent on it is not only being wasted but is causing great injury to the province by increasing unemployment.

Music before mosques.

Referring to the restrictions imposed on the Ramnaumi procession at Biswan the Pratap remarks: The bureaucracy of the United Provinces is favouring the Muslims unduly in the matter of music before mosques. This will encourage the goondas to make impossible demands and insist on their acceptance. We want the provincial Hindu Sabha to settle this question once for all in a central place like Allahabad, and, if this be not possible, the Hindu Sabha should strive to make the Patuakhali satyagraha a success as the question of music in the towns of the United Provinces is allied to it.

Indian States.

The Abhyudaya remarks: Those who are familiar with the conditions prevailing in Indian states are of opinion that they will ultimately prove obstacles in the path of the country's freedom. Indian states are the centres of the plague of despotism and the system of administration prevailing there deserves to be destroyed. If a plebiscite were taken the subjects of the Indian states would be found to welcome British interference. The Government of India should not forget the oppressed subjects of the Indian states when the question of their future is taken up.

The Lahore riots.

The Lahore riots continue to absorb the attention of the papers and to provide fresh material for bitter communal recriminations. As usual, extremist papers are charging local authorities with wilful dereliction of duty. Referring to the use of kirpans by Sikhs during the riots the Aligarh Mail writes:—These kirpans are really swords, and as such should not be allowed to be dangled about by the Sikhs. But when the Government does allow the Sikhs to wear them, then, in fairness and justice, it must allow the non-Sikhs and Muslims also to wear swords for their personal defence. We are firmly of opinion that the use of kirpans should be declared unlawful. The Pratap does not think that an inquiry into the causes of the riot will serve any useful purpose and remarks:—In the Lahore riot, as in other communal disturbances, it was the Muslims who indulged in such cowardly attacks. We do not absolve the Hindus entirely from this charge, but we maintain that they only followed the example set by the Muslims. The increase of communal jealousy is diminishing the enthusiasm for the attainment of swaraj and encouraging among the Hindus and Muslims the desire to win for their respective communities the favour of the bureaucracy. We are of opinion that communal disturbances spread cowardliness and strengthen the bureaucracy. It will be some gain if they open our eyes to the weakness of the bureaucracy. The Aj says that if even a hundredth part of what is being published in Lahore newspapers regarding the local riot be true, one must be driven to say that communal prejudice had rendered those people callous brutes whose duty it was to maintain peace. There is no doubt that the higher authorities, specially the Governor, acted efficiently, but the same cannot be said regarding subordinate police officers and against them very serious charges have been made by respectable leaders. The Muslim constables are charged with helping their co-religionists in attacking Hindus. An open and independent inquiry should be made into the matter. This incident also shows how dangerous it is to employ members of only one community in maintaining peace during times of communal excitement. Referring to the Hindu-Muslim disturbances at various places the Balidan says that there must be some secret object of the Government, too, in the communal disturbances, otherwise it is impossible that the Government, which defeated even Germany, should not be able to stop them. The Medina throws the entire responsibility for the riots on the sangathan movement and says:—Does the action of a few villainous and wicked Hindus and Sikhs in holding a diwan on a petty affair over a woman, declaring war by beat of drum and then suddenly attacking unwary and unconcerned Muslims and rendering the sacred bodies of three of them lifeless not show that the god of sangathan wants to make a grim demonstration of his strength and secure a certificate for his damned actions from a mischievous party comprising Malaviya and others? Pity on those eternal wretches who have turned India into a hell by inaugurating the shuddhi and sangathan movements! God's curse on these sangathanist champions! Hindu patriots and justice-loving Hindus and Sikhs! How long will you keep quiet and allow this sort of bloodshed to go on? If you do not curb the activities of the Hindu Mahasabha the time will soon come when India will be turned into a place of general massacre. Kind Government! Have you not yet been able to find out who is guilty? You have acquitted the author of the Rangila Rasul, released the Hindus of Bengal and imprisoned the Muslims of that province. Your law has ruined the Muslims of Saharanpur; you killed Muslims at Kulkathi, and instead of protecting the Muslims you have taken adequate part in ruining them in every part of India. Do you even now want any further proof to find out who is at fault? Muslims, whither are you drifting? In what slumber have you fallen? If you want to remain in India as slaves of other nations and to entrust your future into the hands of your enemies congratulations to you on your apathy. The Najat sarcastically congratulates Pandit Malaviya and his friends on having won the support of the Sikhs and thereby added kirpans to their armoury and says:—But Pandit Malaviya and his friends ought not to sit with equanimity. They are trifling with the lives of the Muslims for which they shall have to rue very soon. If the Muslims become determined to offer the final battle, to say nothing of a handful of Sikhs, even the protection of the Himalayas will not be of any use to the Hindus. We, however, request all thoughtful Hindus, responsible Muslims, and sensible Sikhs to enthrone united India in a lofty palace of love and peace. A bloodthirsty enemy is standing behind you with a number of your greedy leaders under his thumb and is enjoying the fun of your feuds because for the construction of the edifice of his greatness he requires the largest possible amount of your bones. The Oudh Akhbar holds the Muslims of Lahore responsible for the outbreak and says:—The Punjab has become the hot-bed of communalism for a long time, but the present cause of excitement was the welcome accorded by the Muslims of Lahore to the "neo-Muslim Maharana" who has been styled as the "Tablighi Raja" by Mr. Muhammad Ali. The Krishna attributes the comparatively heavy losses of the Hindus and Sikhs to the preponderance of the Muslim element in the police and therefore advises the Hindus to enlist themselves in the police force immediately and says that this is necessary for the war for swaraj, too. The Sada-i-Muslim says that as kirpans were freely used by the Sikhs during the riot it is the duty of the Muslims of the Punjab to compel their Government either to deprive the Sikhs of this privilege or to allow the Muslims also to keep swords. The Jadu says that the present communal riots and attacks on Muslims are the results of the inflammatory speeches delivered by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Lala Lajpat Rai, and Dr. Moonje from time to time.

Communal representation.

Referring to the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee regarding communal representation and allied questions the Leader emphasizes the difficulties in connexion with the proposed separation of Sindh, the constitution of provinces on a linguistic basis, and the introduction of reforms in the North-West Frontier Province and British Baluchistan and says:—Over-sanguine men will do well not to give way to unthinking jubilation in view of the hostile attitude of many prominent Muslims, and several Muslim organizations, which have unmistakably expressed themselves after the publication of the Delhi proposals, in view of other and non-contentious parts of these very proposals, and in view of the attitude of the Hindu communal organizations towards them . . . . . We are not backward in our appreciation of the courage and patriotism of the offer of the Muslim leaders who met in Delhi to do without separate electorates. Neither is it our intention to condemn the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee. All these may be, we trust will prove to be, helps to an acceptable solution of a thorny question. But we reiterate our conviction of the necessity of greater care, greater caution, more thoughtfulness in the consideration of matters of such moment by important public bodies than we apprehend has been bestowed upon them by the latest meeting of the All-India Congress Committee. If, however, the course of events should show the Congress Committee to have been wiser than the counsellors of caution we shall rejoice, indeed. The Indian Daily Telegraph welcomes the resolution and writes:—We sincerely hope that Mr. Jinnah will not find in the amendments any vast change and lead a revolt. It would have been a disaster if the Moonje angle of vision had predominated. It now remains with the Government seriously to consider the new situation that has been created and to build on the renewed foundations a structure that might give more satisfaction than the one built on the Lucknow Pact. In the hands of an unwilling bureaucracy who could not tolerate a progressive India, even the new understanding between the Hindus and Muslims might come to nought. All the same the Indian nation has for the time so far recovered from the fatal attack of communalism as to be able to make this gesture. The Aj says that the All-India Congress Committee displayed a great disregard of public opinion in accepting the Delhi offer of Muslim leaders. It did nothing to sound public opinion on the question through district Congress Committees or by holding public meetings throughout the country. It is nothing short of cruelty to leave the Hindu minority of Sindh to the tender mercies of Muslims in the present state of strained communal relations. The separation of Sindh from the Bombay Province can be effected only when communal situation has definitely improved there. The Abhyudaya remarks:—The acceptance by the Congress leaders of the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates was a foregone conclusion. It is regrettable that Pandit Motilal Nehru, who sponsored the motion for its acceptance, paid no heed to the agitation in the country against the separation of Sindh and the introduction of reforms in the Frontier Province. The Congress leaders sacrificed Hindu interests to conciliate the Muslims. It was easy for Pandit Motilal and his henchmen to concede the Muslim demand, but it is the Hindus of Sindh and the Frontier Province who will have to pay the penalty for it.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Indian Daily Telegraph deeply deplores the mutual distrust between Hindus and Muslims, and, referring to the demands for the appointment of British officers and soldiers for dealing with riots, says:—We are behaving as a nation of mad men. We are helplessly falling into the pit deliberately dug for us by our masters, for we are distinctly praying "At thy feet, ye British, for you alone can save us from mutual destruction." Referring to the suggestion of Khwaja Hasan Nizami that Indian Musalmans should co-operate with the British Government if they want to save themselves from the attacks of the Hindus the Arya Mittra remarks:—We fail to understand how the Muslim community which could not maintain friendly relations with the Hindus when both of them have to live and die in the same land and have other identical interests will be able to co-operate with an alien Government. How a community which dreams of Afghan or Turkish rule in India can be a sincere supporter of the British future alone will unfold. The Bharat Dharma remarks:—The principle of the Congress that we are Indians first and Hindus next is disastrous to the Hindus, and, if they are not disillusioned in time, their annihilation will be inevitable. It is a false and baseless assumption that we cannot attain swaraj without the co-operation of the Muslims. If 24 crores of Hindus are incapable of winning swaraj surely seven crores of Muslims will be of no material help. We exhort the entire Hindu population to think first of its religion and then of swaraj. The Abhyudaya remarks:—We must no longer labour under the delusion that the Muslims are prepared to make sacrifices for the sake of swaraj. They want to take the utmost advantage of the present situation as they are under the impression that Hindus are extremely anxious for swaraj and realize that it cannot be won without Muslim help. We also strive for unity, but every concession made by us is followed by increased demands. The Government rejoices at our recurring disturbances. If it so desired, could it not stop them? Let us impress it upon the Muslims that the Hindus are actuated by no selfish motive in their demand for communal unity. If they are willing to make any sacrifice in the cause of swaraj, well and good, if not let us part company. The Medina holds the activities of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Dr. Moonje responsible for the outbreak of communal riots in the country and says that if the Government sincerely wants to establish peace in India it ought to keep these two mischievous leaders under police surveillance, otherwise it will soon become difficult for the Government to control the offensive mischiefs of the Hindu community.

Shivaji's tercentenary.

Muslim papers strongly resent the celebration of Shivaji's tercentenary. The Aligarh Mail writes:—What is it that has moved the Hindus to observe the Shivaji celebrations? It is really the Hindu hostility towards Musalmans, engendered by the activities of the Arya Samaj, that has driven the Hindus to celebrate with great éclat the birthday of Shivaji. They are celebrating his tercentenary simply because he stubbornly opposed the Muslim power of his day. They have made mountains of mole-hills in exaggerating the deeds of Shivaji. In what light would our Hindu brethren consider it if the Musalmans were to celebrate the Third Battle of Panipat which shattered to pieces the whole Mahratta power and sounded the death-knell of the revival of Hindu power? Again, what would be the effect on the Hindu-Muslim relations if Musalmans were to celebrate the victories of Mahmud of Ghazni? No one can deny that they would prejudice the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity most disastrously, rendering swaraj a chimera. The Vir Sandesh pays a tribute to Shivaji for the protection of cows, Brahmans, and Hindus and says :—In memory of that hero it is the duty of every Hindu to become ready to protect his mother, sister and daughter, his temples and cows. He should be ready to take out the eyes of those who look with evil intentions at them. He should send to hell those who insult Hindu religion. When this will happen, when we learn to take vengeance for wrongs done, then shall we realize that we are celebrating the tercentenary of Shivaji and rightly following in his footsteps. The Medina contends that the object of the Hindu leaders in celebrating Shivaji's tercentenary was simply to infuse blood into the dead veins of the Hindu community and to incite it to violence. This is why riots and disturbances broke out during this function. The events at Lahore, Surat, Dacca, and elsewhere show that the Hindus thought that the time for avenging the victories of Aurangzeb had come, and it had become necessary for them to break the heads of the Muslims.

Thr Kakori conspiracy case prisoners.

Referring to the report that some of the prisoners of the Kakori conspiracy case are in a dying condition as a result of the hunger-strike the Pratap says :—Has the heart of the bureaucracy really become stony? Is this why Mr. Montagu described the bureaucracy as " wooden and impervious ?" To what condition has the bureaucracy of the United Provinces reduced these youths ! It is, perhaps, waiting for the time when, crushed in spirit and body, they may give up the hunger-strike, and then it will come out with a Press communiqué that the agitation about the strike was a concocted one. But it cannot throw dust in the eyes of the public. After this display of brutality the United Provinces bureaucracy will not be able to exculpate itself despite any number of trickeries. If any humanity is still left in it, it should prove its good-heartedness by providing suitable facilities for the Kakori convicts. One Govardhanji Sharma, writing in the Sainik in an impassioned tone, takes the public severely to task for its indifference in the matter of the hunger-strike of the Kakori convicts and remarks :—O ungrateful world ! It is in consequence of these sins that you are being driven like sheep by the shepherds. This is the reason, and the main reason, of your being starved, oppressed, and harassed. These inebriated and brave soldiers who are being described to-day as revolutionaries and dacoits, and who could have lived a luxurious life if they chose, are reaping the fruits of having loved heartless persons like you. One word to the Government. These prisoners will willingly give up their lives and show that India also possesses a large number of her own McSwineys. The Government should not forget that martyrdom cannot go in vain. If Government is really desirous of removing revolutionary ideas from their minds it should accord human treatment to them and give them time to revise their ideas. But we have no such hope from the perverse Government. Our appeal is, therefore, to the Indian people to leave no stone unturned to bring about an honourable termination of the hunger-strike.

The Bengal detenus.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion warmly commend the action of the Governor of Bengal on ordering the release of Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and express the hope that other detenus will also be released. The Leader writes :—We congratulate the Governor of Bengal on the good sense and high-mindedness he has shown in directing that Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose should be set free immediately. By acting wisely as he has done, Sir Stanley Jackson has given a good start to his régime ; he has prejudiced opinion in his favour. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—Even for this belated release we have to thank not the system of government, but the accidental presence, at the head of the Bengal administration, of a Governor who has not yet had time to be poisoned by the virus of Indian bureaucracy. Frankly, we are not overjoyed at the release ; but we shall congratulate the Government if, in the course of a week or a fortnight, we hear of the unconditional release of more brave youths spirited away from life and work by the cruel hand of a suspicious Government. The Aj expresses gratification at the release of Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose, and says that the new Governor of Bengal displayed statesmanship in setting him free, and asks whether similar wisdom and justice will be shown in dealing with the question of the release of other detenus.

Thr Arya Samaj.

The suggestion of the Times of India regarding the suppression of the Arya Samaj continues to evoke heated controversy on communal lines. Muslim papers approve the suggestion and hold the Arya Samajists solely responsible for all the present communal troubles in the country. The Najat writes ;—This villainous community has appeared like a plague for religion and peace and its mischiefs have caused irretrievable injury not only to India's freedom, but also to her reputation and peace. If in the name of religious neutrality the Government supports the intrigues and bloodshed committed by the Arya Samajists no one would view its action with approbation. The Government ought to act upon the advice of the Times of India and bear in mind that if to-day it is making Muslims the victims of the Arya Samaj, to-morrow it would itself fall victim to it. Referring to Lala Lajpat Rai's remark that the suppression of the Arya Samaj would amount to the declaration of a bloody war the Mansur writes:—There is surely something on the basis of which the Lala has offered such a threat to Government. Can poor Muslims also dare to do so? It is just possible that the Hindus and the Arya Samajists have established some powerful organization on the strength of which they can intimidate even the greatest power on earth. But to make sure it would be better if, as proposed by the Times of India, an inquiry is made into the shuddhi, sangathan, and tanzim movements and the movement which may be found to have been detrimental to the peace of the country is wiped out. The Hamdam wonders why Lala Lajpat Rai regards the proposed inquiry as an indictment against the Arya Samaj, and says that if the position of the Arya Samaj is clear it should rather welcome this demand for inquiry. The Parivartan approves the proposal for an inquiry into the causes of the communal tension and says:—The Government, which paid no heed to opposition against the abolition of suttee and slavery, is taking no steps against this general breach of peace. If it cannot stop these disturbances it should consider whether it should keep the administration of India in its hands or should make it over to others. The Krishna tries to make out that Arya Samaj cannot possibly be suppressed and writes:—The Arya Samaj is a movement against tyranny and oppression. Can such a movement be crushed by machine-guns and a repressive policy? The Arya Samaj is to complete by means of shuddhi and sangathan the work left unfinished by Pratap and Shivaji. If anyone tries to suppress it he will have to face a bloody war which will not only revive the memory of 1857 but will be fraught with more dangerous consequences.

Political propaganda.

The Vartman remarks:—It is extremely regrettable that when labourers have become pillars of strength in other countries of the world in India their miseries are indescribable, and even to-day they are being ground down in the mill of injustice. The delay in the attainment of swaraj is due to our negligence of the cause of the labourers who form 90 per cent. of the Indian population. How can the goddess of freedom be favourably disposed towards us when these true votaries of freedom have to bear insult and humiliation at every step? It is the duty of the Congress to organize the labourers and spend all its energies in making preparations from now for according a fitting reception to these rulers of the twenty-first century who will replace despotism by socialism, capitalism by equality, and imperialism by democracy. The Bharat Dharma writes:—There is no hope of India's emancipation so long as the people do not abandon the policy of political mendicancy and become self-reliant. The vital issue before the country at present is the release of Bengal detenus. Next to satyagrah, for which the country is not yet ripe, the boycott of British goods is the only effective weapon in our armoury and we should lose no time in launching out the boycott movement. If this movement catches on the Government will be compelled to release the Bengal detenus. Trade forms the nose of Great Britain, and, unless it is twisted, the British Government will not open its mouth.

Reforms.

The Indian Daily Telegraph urges the leaders not to build any hopes on the Royal Commission on Reforms, but to concentrate on Hindu-Muslim unity and remarks:—It was the Hindu-Muslim unity which struck terror in the heart of the relentless bureaucracy and forced it to lay down the rudiments of democracy for the future constitution of Government . . . . . The bureaucracy will go on playing us one against another; Brahmans against non-Brahmans and Hindus against Muslims. If our leaders were wise they would not go to England to beg for swaraj. If they had common-sense they would sit at home and solve the vexatious problem of Hindu-Muslim unity. Is there no significance in the deplorable fact that communal tension has augmented on the eve of a further instalment of reforms? Referring to the report that Pandit Motilal Nehru is going to be appointed as one of the members of the Royal Commission on Reforms the Farrukh says :—If this rumour is true then it means that Government wants to widen this political net and to add another link to the chain with which it is sought to bind in slavery the patriots who are mad after liberty. We cannot compliment the Government on this cruel joke. So long as Indians are not accorded an effective voice in it the Commission cannot be of any use to the country and no Indian should accept its membership.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.

Muslim papers resent the suggestion that the two Muslims went to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's residence at Benares with the intention of murdering him. The Medina writes :—The report has been published with a view to discredit the Muslims, to influence judgment in the appeal of Kazi Abdul Rashid, to prove conspiracy in connexion with the murder of Swami Shradhanand, and to make Pandit Malaviya a living martyr. It adds that if this story has any truth the visitors must have been some lalas who had gone there to furnish matter for the columns of the Abhyudaya. The Krishna says that the visits paid by two Muslims to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's house may be treated by Hindu leaders like Pandit Motilal Nehru and the Muslim leaders as the individual acts of those two Muslims, but the fact is that it is the teachings of Islam which are impelling Muslims to do such acts and thereby ruin the country. So long as such teachings continue in the country there can be no genuine union between the two communities. It is necessary to effect a change in the mentality of Muslims and to stop such teachings as mislead them by promises of houris and heaven as a reward for killing an infidel. The Sewak observes :—This attitude of Muslims towards Pandit Malaviya is calculated to produce a striking revolution in the atmosphere of the country. Government should do its best to find out the real truth about such incidents. Government's silence on this occasion would mean that it wishes to strengthen the hands of goondas and mischievous persons. Does not the Government realize what effect such news about Pandit Malaviya will produce on the public ?

Pandit Govind Malaviya's case.

Commenting on the dismissal of Pandit Govind Malaviya's case against Mrs. Marriner by Mr. Finlay, the trying magistrate, the Pratap remarks :—Mr. Finlay dismissed the case on the ground that the expression "silly ass" was not defamatory. But will Mr. Finlay like himself to be addressed as a "silly ass" in his bungalow ? The expressions "idiot," "silly swine," "little pig," etc., are in common use in the English language and presumably they are as meaningless as the expression "silly ass." Will then Mr. Finlay and the husband of that white woman, Mrs. Marriner, like these epithets to be prefixed to their names ? The Aj and the Abhyudaya also write to the same effect.

The Lahore riots.

The Aligarh Mail says that during the Lahore riots Muslim magnanimity and peaceful character stood in striking contrast to the Sikh barbarism and Hindu hooliganism and yet the misery of Muslims is heart-rending. "In their predicament they face opposition on all sides. The whole Muslim India is most concerned about the Lahore tragedy and the Muslim Press. Fancy the Lahore situation. It was the unarmed innocent Musalmans who were brutally attacked near Haveli Kabli Mal, three of whom were murdered in cold blood at the time and one died subsequently, and it is now the Muslim Press which is threatened with proscription." The Abhyudaya urges the need for the institution of an official inquiry into the charges of pro-Muslim bias levelled against the police by respectable Hindu leaders in connexion with the riots and remarks that such an inquiry will not only afford an opportunity to the police to refute those charges, but will also save the authorities from the charge of partiality. The Mashriq says:—Incidents in Bengal and Lahore have established that the reforms should be withdrawn as soon as possible, for since their inauguration our fellow-countrymen have got nothing to do but to commit mischief. They have made up their minds to establish Hindu raj in the country by annihilating Muslims. Now the Sikhs also have become their supporters. The Lahore disturbances show that in spite of the sudden attack the Muslims did not fail to do justice to their bravery. The Sikhs and Hindus have jointly taught the lesson to the Muslims that they should always remain vigilant. If Sikhs can freely use kripans, the Muslims also should keep swords. The object of the enemies in creating these disturbances is to reduce the number of Muslims. Ridiculing the demand of the Lahore Muslims to declare the possession of the kripans illegal under section 144, the Desh Bhagat writes:—If this section is to be applied against all those things which can be used as weapons, what will be the fate of the knives in slaughter-houses and in the shops of Muslim merchants? It is hoped that the Government will never yield to this unwise demand as, if unfortunately it attempts any interference in this religious matter, there will be a tremendous agitation which the Government will find difficult to control. The Hindustani regrets that innocent Hindus were dragged out of their houses and mercilessly beaten in the public streets in the presence of the police during the riots. The Muslim police predominates in Lahore and it openly favoured Muslims and satisfied its spite by getting Hindus thrashed with lathies before its eyes. Innocent Hindu children and old men were stabbed with knives by the brave Muslims in lonely places, as they were sure that their co-religionists in the police would not arrest them. The Bharat Dharma refers to the charges of partiality levelled by Dr. Naurang and Bhai Parmanand against the police in connexion with the riots and remarks:—Truly the lives and property of the Hindus and the Sikhs in the Punjab are not secure. The Government would do well to change its policy of entrusting an important department like the police exclusively in the hands of the members of one particular community and to hold an open inquiry into the conduct of those police constables who participated in the atrocities perpetrated during the riot and bring the culprits to book. If the Government is not inclined to institute an inquiry the people will have no hesitation in accusing the Punjab Government of partiality towards the Muslims.

Communal representation.

Muslim papers generally welcome the All-India Congress Committee's decision regarding joint electorates, but the Hindu press is sharply divided. Referring to the Bombay Chronicle's "hysterics of joy" over the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee the Leader says:—Past experience should be a warning against such jubilation. A new heaven and new earth are not going to be created by paper resolutions. It ought not to be forgotten that several Muslim organizations have already expressed their hostility to the Delhi proposals and that the Hindu Mahasabha has not yet accepted them. When the Muslim League and the Hindu Mahasabha endorse the Congress Committee's resolution it would be time enough to express jubilation. The utmost that can be said at present is that it is a hopeful sign that so many leading Muhammadans have declared their readiness to accept joint electorates, though it has been made subject to conditions which we regard as wholly irrelevant to the question of franchise and which raise complicated issues, financial as well as administrative, which cannot be decided offhand. The Aj notes with satisfaction that the All-India Congress Committee has accepted the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates and says that if Muslim organizations ratify it, a very great work will have been accomplished. It, however, remarks that this compact has been entered into only in view of the forthcoming Royal Commission. The Congress is doing no independent work and now depends exclusively on legislative bodies. It is regrettable that the National Congress has now only become a body to elect representatives to the legislatures. We were dreaming of making the Congress the parliament of free India one day, but now we find it only as a hand-maid of a foreign institution. If swaraj is to be attained not through the efforts of the people but only through proving our capacity before the Royal Commission, the creed of the Congress should be changed and its goal should be re-fixed to be what it was before in 1920. It is no good quarrelling with Liberals and Responsivists and increasing the number of political parties when the object of all of them is to secure crumbs from the rulers by propitiating them. The Vartman opines that the decision of the All-India Congress Committee regarding joint electorates, though beneficial, is premature. It apprehends that it will not be accepted by the Muslim community and says that when unity is not in sight it will not be proper to placate one community by encroaching upon the rights of another in the name of unity. The Surya takes the All-India Congress Committee to task for accepting the Muslim offer and remarks:—The Congress has become a hand-maid of Pandit Motilal Nehru and the sole function of the All-India Congress Committee is to register his decrees. It was, therefore, a foregone conclusion that Pandit Motilal's views in the matter of the Muslim offer would prevail, and it is an open secret that he favours the Muslims. But it is a matter for gratification that no importance now attaches to the All-India Congress Committee and that its resolutions are treated no better than mere objects of pastime. The Sainik writes:—In the existing circumstances the resolutions passed by the All-India Congress Committee are quite justifiable and are bound to have far-reaching effects. We have not yet come across any sound and reasoned argument against the Hindu-Muslim compromise arrived at by the Committee. The Pratap approves of the decision of the All-India Congress Committee and remarks:—We do not think that any thoughtful person can have the least objection to the decision of the Congress. The so-called custodians of Hindu interests may resent the acquiescence of the Congress in the Muslim demands regarding the separation of Sindh and the introduction of reforms in the Frontier province, but they should remember that the Congress has agreed to the creation of Sindh into a separate province on the principle of redistribution of provinces on linguistic as opposed to communal basis, and that the decision in regard to the frontier province is based on equity and is practically the same as was placed before the country by Mr. Kelkar in his capacity of the president of the Hindu Mahasabha. The Hamdam appeals to Muslims to accept Dr. Ansari's assurance regarding their representation in the Assembly and to give evidence of their freedom from communalism by supporting the proposals of their leaders. The Medina views with satisfaction the decision of the All-India Congress Committee and says that this decision will revolutionize India's politics if the fickle-minded idols of Gokul and Benares abide by their promises. Had the system of joint electorates been in force at the time of the last elections, Lala Lajpat Rai and Dr. Moonje would not have been returned against Dewan Chaman Lal and Mr. Abhyankar. If the Bombay decision is carried out, the Muslims will surely never have cause for disappointment.

All-India Congress Committee.

The Indian Daily Telegraph takes the All-India Congress Committee severely to task for having decided to draft a constitution and says:—The drafting of the constitution is a clear indication of the mendicant mentality in politics. This craze for constitution was absent when we felt strong and when we lived for the high ideal of winning our birth-right of swaraj . . . Have we a clear programme of work, and can new leaders rise to blow into blaze the dying sparks of public spirit? Kerala and Andhra and Nagpur have shown that the sparks are not entirely dead. We must once more instal service and suffering for the country on the high pedestal whence it has been dislodged after the Bardoli blunder and the backsliding of prominent leaders. The only hope now consists in the mutiny of the rank and file against the leaders. The sooner such a mutiny is led by men like Mr. Horniman and Mr. Prakasam, the better it will be for the country. The Himalayan Times writes:—We fail to appreciate Pandit Motilalji's idea of framing a complete and picturesque constitution for India, subordinating to it the more imperative issue of actual constructive work in the country. It is an idle dream to expect the Royal Commission to bring us Reforms which will inaugurate a system of government that will bestow upon us the privileges of real power, initiative and responsibility. The vitality of the nation requires proper harnessing which can be undertaken only by leaders of firm grit and unshakable faith in India's destiny. We should therefore insist upon having a programme of national activities of the rank and file and urge a revival of strong, national agitation irrespective of the pitch of sacrifice it may demand. The Aj expresses dissatisfaction with the decision of the Congress working committee regarding the question of Ministerships and remarks that the people should strongly protest against the hypocritical policy of the leaders, and that if they cannot bring the Congress back to the policy of non-cooperation, they should sever their connexion with its political work and devote themselves to outside constructive programme. In the existing circumstances the Congress will do well to support the view of the liberals and thereby remove artificiality in public life, and those who still hold to non-cooperation should establish a separate organization to propagate it and make the people the basis of all their activities. The Vartman remarks:—The decisions of the committee have not taken us a step further. It is regrettable that the Congress is gradually handing over its reins to arm-chair politicians. It is a retrograde step to enter into a compromise with the Responsivists and is calculated to injure the national cause.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

In the course of an article on the communal tension the Aligarh Mail writes:—We think it our duty to emphasize that nobody should trade on the idea that the Muslim patience is inexhaustible. The Musalmans are quite capable of defending themselves against anybody and against any confederacy. We would appeal to all men of influence and intelligence to employ their position and talents to soothe the exacerbated communal feeling and exhort their less enlightened fellow-citizens to cultivate a spirit of toleration and mutual good-will. By no stretch of imagination can it be urged that India will attain swaraj in spite of the Hindu-Muslim tension as is wrongly supposed by our Hindu "nationalists" who are launching elaborate schemes for complete self-government in the near future. One Ambika Prasad Bajpai writing in the Chitrakut Ashram attributes the slow progress of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements to the paucity of capable workers and suggests that Hindu teachers should devote their summer vacations to the propagation of the Shuddhi movement in the villages. He says:—The well-being of a nation depends on its teachers. At the present moment when the Hindu religion is declining and the followers of other religions are busy planning its destruction it is the duty of Hindu teachers to rise equal to the occasion and devise means of infusing life into the moribund Hindu nation and making it strong enough to be able to defend itself from the attacks of the oppressors. The Arya Mitra invites the attention of the authorities to the "inciting and inflammatory" speech of Sufi Iqbal at Panipat on May 10, and says that these days mosques have become centres for showering poison on Hindus. Government should not treat with indifference such mad effusions of fanatical Muslims and should take adequate measures for the protection of the Hindus of Panipat. So long as the delivering of such mischievous speeches in mosques and majlises is not rendered impossible there can be no peace in the country. The paper also invites the attention of the Government to the appeal published in Al Aman (Delhi) by Nadir Ali Khan for the sacrifice of one crore of cows and says that this appeal is couched in extremely inciting language and cannot but wound the religious susceptibilities of the Hindus. Cannot Government stop the publication of such venomous appeals? Referring to the same subject the Vartman writes :—We are compelled to view the Government's policy with suspicion when we find that no action is taken by Government against certain Maulvis and Mullahs who indulge in speeches falling even ordinarily within the purview of law. This biased attitude of the Government is producing undesirable results. The Mashriq supports the view of Syed Abdullah Haroon that Government should utilize Aman Sabhas to check Hindu-Muslim trouble, as the real object of the Hindus and Sikhs is to provoke sympathetic action by frontier Muslims by means of these riots and thus to antagonise Government and Muslims and then to benefit by the weakening of either in the struggle that is bound to ensue. Government should not ignore communal strife as it is really aimed against its existence. In the course of an impassioned article under the headlines " the Vartman's fire-spitting : Trial of patience and self-respect of Muslims : The mischief of a mischievous Hindu" the Medina invites the attention of the Punjab Government to an article in the Vartman of Amritsar ridiculing Mahomed and his wives and others and observes :—If the bloody Kohat conflagration was the outcome of the plain-speaking of a wily Arya Samajist who in a pamphlet more filthy than himself put to a severe test the sentiments of the Muslims and thereby caused a breach of peace the Punjab Government ought to be aware that Amritsar also, which is only 30 or 32 miles from its headquarters, is about to be submerged in the flood of blood brought about by a most terrible disturbance inasmuch as an evil-natured and mischievous Arya Samajist of Amritsar is, by producing a most accursed specimen of journalism through the rag of a newspaper, maliciously busy in polluting the atmosphere of the Punjab and elsewhere. Is it the policy of the Punjab Government to goad the Muslims to break laws? If on finding the Government silent in respect of such articles the Muslims take the law into their own hands, the blame will lie either on the Government or the Hindu leaders and their community. The Anis congratulates its constituents on re-electing Sir Abdur Rahim to the Bengal Council and observes that if Muslims continue to display the same unity the world will have to acknowledge that the blood of Muslims has some value and that their corpses are not meant to be kicked like stones, but that Muslim blood still enjoys the same importance as when a complete city, a whole army and a vast cantonment could by the sacrifice of all its blood hardly atone for the blood of a single Muslim and believer, when a single drop of their blood demanded the blood of nations and countries, and when a single wound on their bodies humbled to the dust the pride of empires.

The Bengal detenus.

The jubilation of newspapers over the release of Mr. S. C. Bose, has given place to anxiety about his health and strong criticism of the Bengal Government for the delay in releasing him. The Pratap remarks :—We are not inclined to describe the order of Mr. Bose's release as generous. It is possible that the Governor of Bengal may have been actuated by noble feelings in setting him free, but what have we to do with this nobility of feeling when Mr. Bose is back amidst us in mere skeletons? The present state of Mr. Bose's health is the result of the heartlessness of the bureaucracy and of the inhuman treatment accorded to him by the authorities. Bengal is without a leader. Shall we be able to see that day when the various political parties will be organized into one homogeneous whole? Referring to the statement of Earl Winterton in the House of Commons that the release of the other Bengal detenus was not contemplated, the Abhyudaya remarks :—If Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose's release had led any one to think that this signalized the end of injustice and was a prelude to the general release of all the detenus he should now give up his optimism and be convinced that there has been no change in the heart of the Government. The Medina writes :—The Bengal Government does not in any way deserve the thanks of Indians for the release of Mr. Bose. The hardships and sufferings of the Bengal detenus can be gauged from the effect which 31 months' internment has produced on the health of Mr. Bose. Will the Government not give proof of its reasonableness by releasing the other detenus also? The Desh Bhagat writes :—We cannot congratulate Government on the belated release of Mr. S. C. Bose when his health has probably been ruined for ever. Government has by endangering his life been guilty of a crime for which man-made laws provide no punishment. Mr. J. M. Sen-Gupta is mistaken in talking of co-operation with Government simply because Mr. S. C. Bose has been released. Mr. C. R. Das and Mr. Gandhi favoured co-operation with Government only when it displayed a change of heart and showed its readiness to respect Indian aspirations. Mr. J. M. Sen-Gupta should first secure the release of all other detenus and it would then be time to consider the question of co-operation. He should not prejudice the political claims of Indians by undue precipitancy.

The Kakori conspiracy case prisoners.

Newspapers continue to protest strongly against the refusal of the authorities to accord special treatment to Kakori case prisoners. The Aj says that although the prisoners were on hunger-strike for forty days, yet the provincial Government did not agree to accord them the same treatment as is accorded to the worst foreign criminals. No words are too strong in condemnation of such callousness and injustice. Has the Government any justification for its conduct? The Desh Bhagat urges Government to accord serious consideration to the demand of the Kakori prisoners who, it says, have gone on hunger-strike against the jail diet and the uncivilized treatment meted out to them and observes that it does not become any civilized Government that its helpless prisoners should give up their lives writhing in agony in this way. The Oudh Akhbar writes:—The selflessness and patriotism of these educated youths have been acknowledged by the learned Sessions Judge himself, and would it be too much to expect Sir William Marris, who opened his regimè with the release of political leaders, to issue orders for the better treatment of these misguided young men.

Indian States.

Commenting on the reports that "further humiliating terms have been imposed on the Nizam reducing him to a mere puppet" the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Is he to take his trial on the milicious allegations made by certain malcontents in his state? Then what about the charges, made by responsible leaders of people like Lajpat Rai and others, of Government complicity in the Lahore riots and other disturbances in India? Will it be allowable to ask the Government of India to take its trial on the grave charge brought against it by the most saintly person in this country of being Satanic? The mendacious and malicious charges brought against the Nizam by those whom the harsh attitude of the Government towards its faithful ally has inspired with impudence pale into insignificance when compared to the insinuations made against the Government of India, not by malcontents but by leaders of public opinion in British India. There is terrible unrest in British India with all the horrible accompaniment of rioting, bloodshed, sedition and discontent. The Haqiqat complains that the Nizam has been forced to send his prince to England to provide a few more jobs for European office-hunters. The fact is that ousted from British India by growing competition and awakening public consciousness fresh fields and pastures new are being sought by the British job-seeker. Muslims now realize that English influence is now being established in Hyderabad through British officials. The Desh Bhagat protests against the Government of India's action in forcing the Nizam to send his sons to England for education and says that this following so soon in the wake of the affair of the Tikka Sahab of Nabha has revealed the secret that Government wants to give the heirs-apparent of ruling chiefs education of its own choosing and thus to place on their gaddis puppets which would always dance to its tune. In another article the same paper recapitulates the Maharaja of Kapurthala's "costly love affair" when he visited Spain last time and wonders whether there is no law to prevent his projected trip to Paris and thus to save the hard-earned money of his subjects from being frittered away in frivolities.

Political propaganda.

In the course of a strongly-worded editorial article the Sudharak remarks:—The cruel bureaucratic police of unfortunate India regards itself to be the master of the people. It is emboldened in its irresponsible career by the knowledge that its misdeeds are never taken notice of. It holds unchecked sway even in cities, not to speak of the villages. Even the meanest and the most insignificant police constable can easily dishonour any respectable Indian. Even under the very nose of the bureaucracy one comes across the heart-rending deeds of the myrmidons of the police. Indeed, British administration in India has now been replaced by police raj. Our soul trembles at the sight of the repetition of the Chengezian cruelties and barbarities before the civilized world in this twentieth century. We have read in histories several stories of meanness and cruelties, but witness them in this police raj alone. The United Provinces police has earned a greater notoriety than any other provincial police in these respects despite the praise lavished on it by the Inspector-General of Police in season and out of season. What misdeed is there in the world which the United Provinces police does not commit!

The Nagpur satyagrah.

The Anand disapproves of the satyagrah movement at Nagpur against the Arms Act and the Explosive Substances Act and says that the movement will subside after creating a commotion for a few days and will do more harm than good. The Desh Bhagat writes:—We congratulate Mr. Awari on his speech of May 13 in which he urged people to manufacture bombs and arms openly. In reality, it is the natural right of every person to manufacture and keep arms, and it is the British Government alone which has deprived Indians of this right and made them so weak and cowardly that it has always to bother about their defence. The "Armed satyagarha" of Nagpur will prove a panacea for India and every Indian nationalist should help to make it a success.

Bengal Jails Enquiry Committee's report.

Commenting on the Bengal Jails Enquiry Committee's report the Abhyudaya remarks:—It appears that the object underlying the appointment of the Bengal Jails Enquiry Committee was not so much the improvement of the condition of the prisoners as the strengthening of the jail administration and the overawing of the prisoners. Barring the recommendations regarding the reformative influences inside the jail and the after-care of the prisoners on release, the report is full of mischief. Little did we dream when the appointment of this committee was announced that instead of introducing reforms in the Bengal jails it would make reactionary recommendations.

Shivaji's tercentenary.

Commenting on the celebration of the tercentenary of Shivaji the Mashriq says:—The movement which was originally started against Englishmen has now been made a source of provocation to Muslims. Shivaji was not a saviour of the country and his services had no more weight than those of the anarchists of Bengal. Hindu leaders and the Hindu press having become convinced that they can in no way expel Englishmen from India have considered it proper to enslave the Muslims of India first. Thereafter Englishmen will themselves leave the country as Muslims alone were always ready to help them. We advise Muslims that they should neither help Englishmen nor oppose them and should not be provoked by the Hindu movement. The programme of annihilating Muslims is being acted upon at present in India. It will be decided by 1929 whether Englishmen realize the necessity of staying in India or not. Then the Muslims will have an opportunity of fighting a decisive political battle and of teaching a lesson to Dr. Moonje and men of his type.

Muslim affairs.

The Hamdam urges that the proportion of Muslims in the Indian Civil Service should be one-third according to the Lucknow pact and a student of the Aligarh University should be nominated every year for the Indian Civil Service competitive examination held at Allahabad.

Foreign affairs.

A number of papers regard the rupture of the Anglo-Soviet trade relations as a prelude to a war between England and Russia. The Aj says that the Conservative party and Cabinet in Britain appear to depend for their existence on hatred against Russia. The Conservative Cabinet was getting unpopular owing to its illiberal policy in regard to China and its activities to suppress trade unions and therefore it was thought imperative to raise a hue and cry against Russia. The action of the British Cabinet in respect of the raid on Arcos House has been unjustifiable. In a subsequent issue the paper says that Britain has broken off relations with Russia on very flimsy grounds. Hatred against the Bolshevik Government and terrible greed for territory have rendered the British Government blind to the consequences of such a policy. Unfortunate India, too, will be badly involved in these consequences. As a result of this open hostility of Britain against Russia the military expenditure of India, which is already heavy, will be further increased, and, in case a war breaks out between Russia and England, Indian troops will be utilized in it. It is our duty to protest strongly against such a policy of Britain. It is not yet too late for Britain to respect the dictates of justice and international etiquette and thereby avoid a conflict. It is time that we should plainly tell the British authorities that we are not prepared to support her in the maintenance of her domination and in the satisfaction of her Bolshevik hatred and retributive spirit. As a starving people we are unable to squander our men and money in upholding imperialism. Indian leaders should make such a declaration in time and explain to the people the evils of the international policy of British authorities and its disastrous consequences to India. The Hindustani opines that all Islamic countries will take the side of Russia, and the result of any war with that country will be disastrous for England. When France and Japan did not help England in the Chinese imbroglio it is idle to expect that she would receive any aid from them in a widespread Asiatic conflagration. India also is at present much more discontented than she was at the beginning of the War of 1914 and her help also would be very half-hearted and England should not hazard any rash steps. Exhorting Indians all over the country to render monetary aid to the medical mission to be sent by the All-India Congress Committee to China the Najat observes that the object of this mission is not merely to show sympathy with the Asiatics, but also to enable Indians themselves to heal the wounds inflicted by Indian soldiers on the Chinese and to make it clear to the world that the same India which becomes cowardly, impudent, and bloodthirsty at the instance of the British Government becomes most chivalrous, sympathetic, and humane when left to herself.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Arya Mittra refers to the decision of the Punjab High Court upholding the sentence of death passed on Abdul Rashid and remarks: The matter does not end with the execution of Abdul Rashid. The threatening letters received by Dr. Moonje and other Hindu leaders confirm the belief that there was a conspiracy behind the murder of Swami Shradhanand, and make it abundantly clear that even now there is no dearth of assassins among the opponents of the shuddhi and sangathan movements. We draw the attention of the Government towards this and request it to trace the conspiracy which is responsible for these threatening letters. The Shankar writes: If the bureaucracy with its high-paid officials cannot trace the senders of these threatening letters it has no right to carry on the administration of the country. The Abhyudaya says that Maulana Muhammad Ali has done irretrievable injury to the cause of Hindu-Muslim unity by his Bhendi Bazar speech in which he exhorted the Muslims to convert all children born to Islam. The paper congratulates Dr. Moonje on having disobeyed the order under section 144 passed on him and remarks that these days the authorities are fully abusing the law. Of all the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code section 144 is the most misused one. By the application of this section the authorities want to gag everybody. The Surya condemns the sentence passed on the editor of the Hindu Punch as too severe, and complains that there is a large number of Muslim newspapers which leave nothing undone to promote racial hatred and which emit poison every day and yet their editors are hardly ever produced before law courts. It adds: Are Urdu journals never examined in the Vernacular department of the Government? Commenting on the reports that threatening letters are being sent by Hindus to Muslim leaders the Medina writes: Now every sangathanist wants to become an Abdul Rashid and is busy dangling the dagger which Malaviya and Moonje wanted to tie to the waists of Hindu women. We know that there is not a single Muslim in this world who will be cowed down by these threats. Muslims have been testing the strength of arms and the sharpness of the naked sword of the Hindus since the days of Muhammad Bin Kasim. Even if it be assumed for a moment that the worthy sons of mountain robbers like Shivaji have become prepared to kill Muslims the latter have nothing to fear because they have been taught by their Prophet that death is pre-ordained. We pray to God that even in this land of slaves Indian Muslims may get opportunities for martyrdom. Nothing can be a greater blessing for them than this. The Oudh Akhbar deplores that the Muslim leaders and press have not uttered a single word of condemnation against the action of that section or party of their community which sends threatening letters to Dr. Moonje and other Hindu leaders and writes: We invite the attention of the high officials of the Criminal Investigation department to this dangerous propaganda and ask them whether all their activities are to be confined to the shadowing of political workers? Is it not their duty to trace these miscreants and bring them to book? Will not a member of the Criminal Investigation department who receives such letters consider his life in danger? The Criminal Investigation department officials of other places in general, and of Delhi in particular, ought to strain every nerve to find out the culprits. The Hamdam holds that the Rangila Rasul being published in Urdu, their national language, is much more offensive to Indian Muslims than the Vichitra Jiwan, which has been written in the Nagri script rather unfamiliar to Muslims and urges that something should be done to reconcile the conflict between the two neighbouring High Courts in their judgments on these two books respectively. The Hindustani exhorts the Delhi officials to have regard for public sentiments and exercise great discretion in passing orders in connexion with the taking out of cow processions on the occasion of Bakr-Id at Delhi, and says that it is nothing but provocation on the part of Muslims to take out sacrificial cows through Hindu quarters. The Hindus can bear to sacrifice their own lives, but they cannot bear to see the knife being applied to the throats of cows before their very eyes.

Communal representation.

The resolution of the All-India Congress Committee on joint electorates continues to be severely criticized on communal lines. The Shankar remarks: Although the acceptance of the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates by the All-India Congress Committee demonstrates the magnanimity and the broad outlook of the Hindu members of the committee it cannot allay the existing communal tension in the country because Hindu-Muslim disturbances have not their origin in the system of separate electorates, but are fostered by a third party. The Pratap remarks: Although there is no harm in introducing reforms in the Frontier Province and Baluchistan it is not proper to mix up this question with that of joint electorates. It is extremely unjustifiable to stem the tide of nationalism by such restrictions as the redistribution of provinces and the introduction of reforms in certain provinces. We resent the spirit of bargaining that pervades the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates. Such a spirit never helps the cause of nation-building. The Arya Mitra protests against the decision of the All-India Congress Committee regarding the constitution of Sindh into a separate province and remarks: This decision has made good what little was left in the way of Muslim supremacy in Sindh. Already Muslim teachers preponderate in schools where they try to proselytize Hindu students. The district boards of Sindh are Muslim bodies manned and controlled by Muslims with the result that one of the boards has deputed forty Maulvis for the propagation of Islam in its schools. And on the constitution of Sindh into a separate province the Councils will also be captured by the Muslims with the result that the ministerships and other offices will also go to them and the condition of the Hindus who are in a microscopic minority will be rendered still worse. In the course of the second instalment of its articles on the decision of the All-India Congress Committee regarding joint electorates the Medina writes: Taken as a whole the Bombay pact is very encouraging and useful and there could have been nothing better for Muslims if in its working they had not to deal with some communities which are not familiar even with the words fairness and toleration and in whom narrow-mindedness, encroaching on the rights of others and callousness, have become second nature. There are certain things behind the procedure of the All-India Congress Committee and the sequence of the various parts of the resolution which are not without danger for Muslims. If the Muslims do not try to remove certain defective and pernicious provisions the pact will not only cause grave injury to their interests, but will also prove prejudicial to the peace of the country. The approval of the resolution by Jayakar, Kelkar, and Moonje after its very principle had been opposed by the Hindu Mahasabha is not without significance. Our leaders should insist on the separation of Sindh and the inauguration of Reforms in the Frontier Province and Baluchistan as a condition precedent to the introduction of joint electorates. At the same time the proportion of Muslims in public services should be fixed and provision should be made to keep intact the existing Muslim majority in Bengal and the Punjab. The Aziz-i-Hind insists that Muslims stand to lose in abandoning separate representation and that inter-communal unity can never be established by joint electorates. Government may accept joint electorates, but it cannot be expected to subscribe to such hare-brained projects as that of the separation of Sindh, etc.

Bengal Jails Enquiry Committee's report,

The recommendations of the Bengal Jails Enquiry Committee, especially those relating to the treatment of political prisoners, have evoked vehement criticism. The Leader writes: The committee have betrayed their unsympathetic political bias by the way in which they have referred to the detenus. It is well known that these unfortunate persons have not been condemned by any judicial tribunal and yet have been deprived of their liberty for an indefinite period by an executive wholly irresponsible to the people. The Himalayan Times writes: The report displays a glaring perversity of views based on a travesty of facts. It is a spiteful terrible document full of deep-seated hatred... We need no greater proof than this to convince us as to how the Government is relentlessly practising a policy of persecution with ruthless energy in regard to the treatment of detenus and political prisoners. The shocking treatment prescribed by the committee for these helpless victims of bureaucratic wrath has shaken off our stupor. The cruelty of the whole affair glares before our eyes. Writing in the Pratap a correspondent under the nom-de-plume "A Jail Bird" remarks: A perusal of the report shows that the farce of appointing the enquiry committee was enacted with the object of making the condition of political prisoners unbearable and perpetrating inhuman atrocities on them. We can anticipate the result of this report. All the recommendations calculated to increase the sufferings of the political prisoners will be accepted and those relating to reforms in jail administration will be consigned to the wastepaper basket on the ground that any action on them will be premature. The Aj says that the report affords a good specimen of the mentality of the authorities who always hold themselves to be infallible. One cannot but doubt the humanity of the writers of the report who recommend the association of political prisoners with ordinary criminals during day-time, but their segregation in cells at night. If political prisoners are to be treated in jails like ordinary criminals despite the difference in the nature of their offences the sympathy of the country with the former will steadily increase, and in the same proportion will grow also the dissatisfaction of the people against the existing system of administration. The Bengal Government will have to give due weight to dictates of humanity and political expediency in considering the report. The Medina says that no well-wisher of the Government can help deploring the recommendations of the Jail Committee as they present a picture of hard-heartedness, cruelty, inequity, and vindictiveness. The Haqiqat characterises as inhuman the recommendations of the committee in regard to the detenus and wonders whether the god of "British justice" will accept the cruel suggestions of the committee even in regard to those who have not been convicted in any court of law and whom the Government dare not prosecute.

The Bengal detenus.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion continue to protest against the attitude of the Government with regard to the Bengal detenus. The Leader writes: The Government of India and His Majesty's Government are apparently content indefinitely to prolong an act of gross and intolerable injustice amounting to meanness and callousness. They should have thought that decency required either the release of the men or their trial in a court of law. The Government should consider the position from the point of view of common sense. Their sense of what is due to a powerless subject people may be weak. But it becomes imperialists such as they are to ask themselves whether their policy has not dragged their own prestige in the mire. The Aj says that by releasing Mr. S. C. Bose the Governor of Bengal has shown the courage of his convictions and advises His Excellency to win the heart of Bengal by setting free other detenus, too It is for him to show whether he is willing to grasp the hand of Mr. Sen Gupta extended for co-operation. He should strongly protest if pressure is exorted on him from London and Simla not to release the detenus. If the political detenus are not released even now the political atmosphere of Bengal is bound to become venomous. The Najat remarks that India will bear in mind that Government has spared no effort to wreck the health of Mr. Bose, and the memory of this wrong will grant her strength to wipe out the Bengal Ordinance and then those who have murdered justice will be lodged in Insein jail in place of those who are seeking justice. Would that Government were even now to realize that the Bengal Ordinance is an iniquity which leads to ruin. The Hindustani says that Indians cannot be thankful to the Bengal Government for the release of Mr. S. C. Bose who was interned without any justification and was set at liberty only when his condition became hopeless. It is a vain hope to expect the Government to release other detenus whom it regards as dangerous to its existence. It is possible that they may be released only when on account of undergoing the sufferings of jail their condition becomes like that of Mr. Bose and they are rendered quite unfit to serve the country.

Political propaganda.

In the course of an larticle, headed "Our Loyalty And Its Reward," the Indian Daily Telegraph says that, although India poured forth her immeasurable resources in aid of the British Government in its hour of need, Great Britain treats Indians with scant courtesy, with undeserved harshness, with undue severity . . . . The people and the princes tolerate all sorts of iniquities, endure all kinds of indignities, bear patiently terrorism and frightfulness of the Jallianwalla Bagh and Kulkathi type. The Aj writes: A new mansion is being built in London for the Indian High Commissioner at a cost of about forty-five lakhs of rupees. India's money is wasted in this manner, and yet they say that they are protecting the God-given trust. In India money is not available for works of public utility. There is scarcity of water-supply in the hot weather in big cities and for want of funds it has been impossible to improve water-works. Poor men are being crushed under the weight of taxation and the authorities of this country are constructing a grand mansion in London to add to its beauty. This is how our money is being wasted. This is called good administration and the Reforms have given us the right that we cannot stop it. In a leading article the paper tries to make out that all the activities of the authorities in India are intended to benefit Britain, and that if India, too, benefits from them in some measure it is purely an accident. It points out that the exchange policy and the protection of British steel have clearly benefited British industries at the expense of India. With the establishment of Central Reserve Bank currency notes will gradually replace silver money. It is in this manner that the authorities act most arbitrarily and irresponsibly, and the legislature is so constituted that it cannot serve as a check on them. The Abhyudaya condemns, as highly sycophantic, the action of the Government of India in sending a representative to Australia to welcome the Duke of Connaught and offer him valuable presents and remarks. Does the Government of India possess such enormous wealth as cannot be spent in India herself? True it is that a concubine is always eager to make a display of her love. On the occasion of Maharana Pratap's birthday anniversary the paper eulogises the services rendered by him to the cause of Hinduism and nationalism and remarks: Mother India, which has been groaning under subjection for centuries, needs to-day the passion of a Pratap for her liberation. If our hearts are filled with as much patriotism and enthusiasm as was to be found in Maharana Pratap, and if we abhor oppression as much as he did our freedom will not be far off. Commenting on the appointment of Sir A. C. Chatterji as President of the International Labour Conference at Geneva the Haqiqat writes: It is only by conferring such hollow distinctions that Indians are consoled. Like numberless other international conferences which are held at Geneva this conference is also an achievement of British diplomacy. The Desh Bhagat thinks that the agitation against the Trade Unions Bill might lead to a general strike which, helped by Russian gold, might overthrow the present Government in England. Indian leaders should show practical sympathy with British labour at this juncture.

Indian States.

Criticizing the attitude of the Government regarding Hyderabad, Nabha, and Indore the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: There must be some object underlying the new policy of humiliation and coercion of the princes, but it is beyond the conception of ordinary mortals. Princes are the staunchest supporters of British rule in India. To alienate their sympathies and to undermine their loyalty is bound to lead to disastrous consequences in case of a trial of strength with any foreign power. Statesmanship dictated a policy of conciliation rather than of humiliation and coercion. But the present British Cabinet appear to be bankrupt in far-seeing statesmanship. They are goading the people and princes to revolt and flouting public opinion in India in a very dangerous manner. Do the British people know the real state of affairs in British India? We believe not, or they would not allow the British Cabinet to embark on a suicidal policy which bodes good to no one and is fraught with disastrous consequences. Commenting on the deputation of Dr. Rushbrook Williams and Colonel Haksar to London for consulting British lawyers with regard to the legal status of the Indian princes under the existing treaties with the British Government the Himalayan Times writes: The past services of these worthies have conclusively shown them to be devoted protagonists of British Imperialism to which they will not hesitate to subordinate the interests of Indian States. . . . , ... The present arrogant attitude of the British Government towards Indian princes finds absolutely no justification in law. It is not law, but the lack of power to resist ill-treatment that is responsible for the domination of the Political department of the Government of India over the Indian States and their rulers. Referring to the contradiction of the report regarding strong action to be taken against the Nizam in case of his failure to agree to certain conditions the Haqiqat observes that since the time of Lord Reading communiqués of this type have been published every now and then, although the events transpiring afterwards expose clearly the real truth about them. There is no use issuing such contradictions when all the world knows what poisonous seed Lord Reading has sown against the Nizam and that Lord Irwin is also following in his footsteps. The Najat says that it is now clear that the British Government is bent on annihilating Hyderabad because that State was supporting Muslims whom Britain wanted to destroy. British pride of power cannot be humbled by resolutions, and Muslim public bodies should exert all their united strength to save their only state which is in reality their backbone.

Currency Commission.

In the course of an article, headed "Currency Disasters," the Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The Britisher in this accursed land is not content with political exploitation which he has carried on for more than a century with incomparable success. What is the fruit of the late Currency Commission which is by far the most burning question in the commercial sphere of the country's life. We hear wails from all commercial institutions for whose benefit ostentatiously this measure of a "Reserve Bank Bill" is going to be trotted out which would eat into the very vitals of commercial stability. The proposals of the commission have enmeshed the currency system of the country in an inextricable and inexplicable net of unmeaning verbiage.

The Nagpur satyagrah.

Commenting on the Nagpur satyagrah the Hamdam heartily appreciates the nationalistic sentiments of Mr. Awari and is glad to find Muslim youths co-operating with the Hindus in the satyagrah, but opines that its continuance is by no means proper when the situation in the country is not favourable to it and the leaders far from giving any practical help fail even to extend their moral support to it.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 11, 1927.

Foreign affairs.

A number of papers are strongly criticizing British action in despatching warships to Egypt. The Aj writes:—The promise which Britain made to grant independence to Egypt is now being kept through warships. The stupid Egyptians do not understand that after allowing the British army to stay in their country they should also allow the British authorities to control their native army. They think that as they are independent they should have the control of their army. Can the independence got in gift be so comprehensive? The imperialistic British Government has now despatched three warships to teach the lesson of independence to Egypt. Who can say after this that Britain is not the champion of independence for weak nations? The Abhyudaya remarks:—Britain is at present intoxicated with the pride of power. The despatch of battleships is ordered over the most trifling affair. Whether it is China or Russia or Egypt she wants to drive them all with the same whip. And the beauty of all this is that the despatch of battleships is being justified in the interests of Egyptians themselves. The Haqiqat says that unless Britain consents to yield up her special powers in Egypt that country cannot have true independence and Egyptians cannot cease to hate Britishers. Britain is endangering her interests by pursuing a wrong policy. The Aj points out that the secret of success of the Chinese nationalists lies in the fact that their programme is based on the people and is meant to allow them to come into their own and deplores that the Indian agitation does not gain in strength simply because it ignores the masses and their needs and because the Indian leaders quarrel among themselves and leaving aside all constructive work depend entirely upon the Royal Commission for the political advancement of the country. The Hamdam appeals for volunteers and funds for the projected Indian Medical Mission to China and says that there should be no delay in its despatch so that the feeling against Indians created by the sending of Indian troops to Shanghai may be counteracted.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to the insult offered to Arya Samaj women in the columns of the Munadi (Delhi), the Aj does not agree with the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi that Khwaja Hasan Nizami should be let off if he expresses regret and says that such an apology has no value. If the insulting report be false the publisher of the paper should be punished severely. Those who have no regard for the honour of mothers and sisters under the influence of communal hatred are not human beings, but beasts. The Abhyudaya also comments to the same effect. The Abhaya publishes an article by Swami Vicharanand Saraswati in which after describing the circumstances under which the worship of Ghazi Mian was instituted the writer exhorts the Hindus not to participate therein. He says that whereas the Hindus ought to have worshipped Maharaj Suhrid Deva, the slayer of Ghazi Masood, they are worshipping a Yavan (Muslim) devourer of cows. According to Hindu shastras, the individual who, giving up the worship of his revered gods, worships false gods goes to hell for millions of years. Hindus, wake up even now; open your eyes and behold. You worship the tombs and tazias of those very people who demolished the birth-place of your revered Ram, destroyed the idol and temple of Vishwanath, Somnath and of other gods and goddesses, erected mosques in their place, who are even now thirsting for your blood, who are destroyers of your religion, life and cows, who create disturbances on your auspicious occasions like Ramlila and Janamashtami and who dishonour your sisters and daughters. Fie on you, a thousand times. If you have the least love for your dear Hindu religion, you should give up worshipping tombs and tazias and become the worshippers of mother India, mother Ganges, mother cow, Durga mata and Saraswati mata. In this lies your welfare and the welfare of your community. The Medina warns the Muslims that Hindus are trying to usurp trades and professions which are the monopoly of Muslims and says:—What is the duty of Muslims in these circumstances? They should encourage Muslim shopkeepers and tradesmen and open cloth and grain shops. They should also take to the business of goldsmiths and other professions which are a speciality of Hindus. There in no other way of remaining alive in India.

The Bakr-Id.

Newspapers generally are appealing to the people to do their best to avoid communal conflicts during the Bakr-Id. The Pratap refers to the precautionary measures adopted by the Government in connexion with the Bakr-Id and remarks:—The bureaucracy is inwardly rejoicing by placing before us an example of our barbarity, fanaticism, subjection and unfitness for Swaraj under the cover of the maintenance of law, order and administration. The Mashriq attributes the present increase in cow-sacrifice to the provocation caused to the Muslims by the Aryasamajist propaganda against it, but exhorts the Muslims to avoid cow-sacrifice as far as possible on the occasion of the next Bakr-Id in deference to the religious sentiments of the Hindu community. The Hamdam deplores the intolerance shown by both Hindus and Muslims on the occasion of the Bakr-Id and appeals to the leaders to devise means to ease the situation. Muslims should make it a point to avoid hurting the feelings of their Hindu neighbours. Discussing the prospects of trouble on the occasion of the forthcoming Bakr-Id, the Najat says that Government ought to be ashamed of itself if in spite of its mighty organization it cannot forestall mischief-makers and prevent rioting instead of taking action only after a good deal of harm has been caused. If Government can close the stable door only after the horse has been stolen it frankly has no right to continue to rule over India. Indians everywhere should be on the alert to nip trouble in the bud and the polemics of the Punjab press and Malaviya and Moonje should be suspended for the nonce. The Sada-i-Muslim urges all Muslims to perform sacrifice and says that while the rich can sacrifice all sorts of animals the poor must needs sacrifice the larger ones, be they cows or other animals.

Muslim affairs.

The judgement of the Punjab High Court in the Rangila Rasul case has evoked a good deal of criticism in the Muslim Press. The Najat says that Muslims should settle with Government what they should do if it cannot suppress such offensive books as the Rangila Rasul and soothe their wounded feelings. The Hamdam regards as queer the arguments by which Justice Dalip Singh has arrived at the innocence of the publisher of the "Rangila Rasul" and commends Justice Dalal's judgement which has recognized the necessity for preserving the public peace. Government should take steps to rectify Justice Dalip Singh's ruling either by a full bench judgement in a future case of a similar nature or by an amendment of the law more carefully elucidating the object of section 153A. The Sarfaraz regards the Rangila Rasul as a most offensive book and is unable to reconcile the conflict between the judgements of the Lahore and Allahabad High Courts in similar cases and urges an amendment of section 153A to nullify the effect of the judgement of the former High Court. Al Barid contends that there can be no worse insult to a religion than an insult to its founder and that if attacks on deceased religious leaders are to be excluded from the purview of section 153A the object of the law to prevent communal hatred will be defeated.

Political propaganda.

The Virsandesh publishes a story in which a Sannyasin is made to bewail the present lot of India in the following words:—"My country, my heavenly country, my dear motherland, before the house of which elephants trumpetted once has today been converted into a desolate waste. That country in whose court beggars extended hands for alms has now become dependent upon others. Those who extended hands have now become the arbiters of its destinies. Its blood is being sucked through thousands of channels. What time is now left in its giving up its ghost? India, which was so prosperous once that it flooded the markets of other countries with her grain, now sees her dear children crying for grain in vain. Indians have today become mere skeletons." The Sannyasin is represented as exhorting the people not to wear costly clothes or ornaments but to regard it as their duty to use them in relieving the miseries of the suffering, to break the fetters of subjection and even to sacrifice their life in the cause of religion. There is only one weapon by which they can shake the whole world, to say nothing of their enemies. Flames will come out of that weapon and destroy subjection. The Shankar refers to the conviction of the editors of the Hindu Punch and the Bote Rang of Calcutta and remarks :— The Indian bureaucracy is incapable of carrying on the administration of the country. It thinks that bravery consists in sending the editors of newspapers to jail and wants to maintain its authority over the people by this means. But Indian journalists also do not know what it is to deviate from the path of duty. "We will not bow down our heads even though we may be made to mount the scaffold. What ! if you hold the ropes in your hands : We are ready to sacrifice ourselves." In the course of an article appealing to the Sadhus to devote their influence and resources to the service of the country the Vartman says :— If these men come out with their flags India will cease to be a subject country and we shall no more witness such misery. The Aj writes :—The Government of India has prohibited the entry into this country of the literature of the anti-imperialistic League. It is possible only for a short time to govern a country autocratically by concealing truth, but this is not possible for ever. The worst literature of the imperialists can come into India. Propaganda on behalf of their League (miscalled the League of Nations) can be carried on most heartily in this country and monetary help can be rendered to it by the Government. Appreciations of Mussolini's frightful administration can be published in the newspapers, but the literature of the true League of Nations which works for the good of the oppressed nations by exposing the imperialists cannot enter this country. This is the liberty of India.

The Nagpur Satyagraha.

The more extremist papers have begun to support the Nagpur civil disobedience campaign. The Aj remarks that the terrible sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment passed on Mr. Manchersha Avari will make even those people sympathize with him who hold his activities to be improper and unsuitable. Mr. Avari's agitation cannot succeed as it was started before public opinion had been prepared for it. Nevertheless, one cannot withhold one's praise from him and his associates for the zeal displayed by them and the sufferings patiently undergone by them in the agitation. Mr. Avari's agitation may not conform to Mahatma Gandhi's non-violence, but there is no doubt that it is proper and constitutional to carry on such an agitation and be prepared to suffer its consequences for the removal of a grievance or for emancipation. The Sainik whole-heartedly supports the Nagpur satyagraha campaign and writes :—Let theorists and prudent persons say what they will, the Sainik bows its head at the feet of the heroism of Mr. Avari. The armed satyagraha of Nagpur is entirely commendable from the moral point of view. The Arms Act is illegal and sinful. It is an unpardonable sin to make people helpless and impotent. No self-respecting nation can bow down before such a sin. In this age of mean cowardice and apathy it is the moral virtues of brave men like Mr. Avari which are sustaining our dying mother. The satyagraha campaign should be continued even if there are thousands of failures. By repeatedly placing the ideal of satyagraha before the people we should remove their fear and hypnotism. We respectfully bow to those brave soldiers who are carrying on the campaign. We pray that as a result of hunger-strike Mr. Avari may not fall a victim to this satanic system of Government, but even if he dies his death will mean new life for the country. The Sainik prays that our non-violent civil disobedience campaign against the Government may continue, leading to incessant conflicts at some place or another and that leaving the habit of calculating gains and losses we may continue to learn the religion of dying. One Manohar Pant writing in the Shakti supports the Nagpur satyagraha and refers in eulogistic terms to the part played by Mr. Avari in this movement. He disagrees with Mr. Gandhi that the present atmosphere is unfavourable for satyagraha and says:—A favourable atmosphere does not always exist, but it is created. If the Nagpur satyagraha is suspended, what is there that will remind us of our duties towards the Bengal detenus after the release of Mr. S. C. Bose? If Shivaji's activities are praiseworthy, why should the great souls of the country view Mr. Avari's movement with indifference? Our leaders will do well to retire and not to stand in our way if they are unable to keep pace with us.

Bengal detenus.

Indian newspapers of all shades of opinion are strongly protesting against the remarks of Earl Winterton regarding the Bengal detenus. The Leader writes:—Earl Winterton's reply in the House of Commons to Mr. Lansbury's motion for adjournment was characterized by a spirit of arrogant reactionaryism, but nothing better was expected from the spokesman of the Government which believes neither in the principles of progress nor of liberty and whose faith in a policy of repression as a panacea for political ills is boundless. In the absence of any judicial finding against the detenus the assertion of Earl Winterton that they were "guilty up to the hilt" was adding insult to injury. It was unjust and unwarranted, and Indian public opinion absolutely refuses to accept the verdict of the executive in the matter based presumably on the reports of police informers and of secret inquiries which have often been found to be worthless. Those who are capable of taking a long view of things must feel that the Bengal policy is an extremely short-sighted one and only proclaims the utter bankruptcy of statesmanship of the present Government. The Aj says that it is impossible to reply to Earl Winterton's observations without feeling indignant. It may not be illegal to besmirch a man's honour in Parliament but surely such action is contrary to the dictates of gentlemanliness and etiquette. If the allegations made by the Under Secretary of State for India against Mr. S. C Bose had been given expression to by an individual outside Parliament he could have been got severely punished by a court of law. Lord Winterton is not content with making hundreds of youths rot in jails without justification and without trial but he is attacking their character too under the cover of Parliament. Is this western gentlemanliness? It is downright falsehood to say that the detenus cannot be brought to trial as it would endanger the life of witnesses. Not only the Kakori conspiracy case but several other similar cases in Calcutta itself were openly heard in law courts for prolonged periods without having any such disastrous consequences. Such excuses are made only when evidence is not available. The Hamdam says that it is cowardly on the part of Earl Winterton to take advantage of Parliamentary privilege to attack a man like Mr. S. C. Bose whose life is in danger and who cannot clear his reputation in court.

Communal representation.

In the course of an article headed "Duping Muslim Simpletons" the Aligarh Mail writes:—We fear the acceptance of the proposals of the Jinnah conference in an amended form by the All-India Congress Committee is a political manœuvre of a sinister kind which is meant to deprive the Muslims of the advantages of communal representation, the only means by which our political rights can escape being swamped by the greed of monopolists of political power. The Congress has been, except during the non-cooperation period, and is even now an organization which is predominantly controlled by the Hindus. Against the advantages of joint electorates secured to the Hindus, the All-India Congress Committee has conceded to the Muslims nothing of practical value. When electorates are common and common election takes place the Hindus, even if seats are reserved, will with the help of their power, prestige and wealth be able to get their Muslim underdogs elected by the Muslim electors. Thus voting will become a fairly prosperous trade, and we may be certain that the political banias of the Hindu community will ply it very briskly. The Abhaya says that the All-India Congress Committee has done grievous injury to Hindus by accepting the Muslim offer regarding joint electorates specially when it was aware of the oppressive treatment of the Muslims towards the Hindu minority in Sindh. The Congress too has become a tool in the hands of Muslim leaders. The pro-Muslim policy of the Congress is fatal to India. Such acts of the Congress make the Hindus lose their faith in it. The Sadaqat says that in view of the numerous safeguards provided in the recent Congress decision it is quite unnecessary for Muslims to insist on separate representation.

Indian States.

The Abhyudaya holds the action of the Chamber of Princes in sending a deputation to England to discuss with the British authorities the question of the position of Indian States in a free India as unwise and as indicative of the extent to which age-long servility can crush all independent thought. It says that it is an irony of fate that the Indian chiefs should rely on the help of Britain which always humiliated them, deprived them of their states and dethroned them on the most trifling pretexts as a reward of their staunch loyalty and have no faith in the Indian people who are never loth to raise a furious agitation whenever the rights of the Indian chiefs are assailed. The paper advises the Chamber of Princes to carry on negotiations in the matter of the future position of the Indian States with the Congress instead of Britain. The Oudh Punch publishes a cartoon in which the Residency is depicted as throwing the bomb of spoliation at the castle of the Indian States and as keeping in reserve numerous shells representing trite objections. The Medina regards the attitude of the Government towards the Nizam as an extreme example of British despotism and says that the fourteen conditions imposed upon him are like fourteen naked swords to be used against a former ally. The paper recounts the services of the Nizam to the Muslims and says:—There is no mention of any charge against the Nizam and yet in the list of punishments a demonstration is made of all their satanic powers. Today the enemies of our religion and the adversaries who are over us are bent upon ruining our civilization, our greatness and our political existence. If Lord Irwin wants to signalize his administration by rendering Muslims helpless he should remember that this community will protect its honour to the end and this desire of his will not be fulfilled. It is time that the Muslims of India gave a practical proof of their faith and love. The Hamdam regrets that the Government of India tolerates the publication of baseless rumours damaging to the prestige of the Nizam and urges that it should not only punish the authors of such canards but should also publish a detailed communiqué to allay public apprehension.

Indian railways.

Referring to the death by suffocation of a Muslim woman in an overcrowded third class compartment of a railway train in Madras, the Pratap remarks:—What a tragedy! The railway department which squeezes lakhs of rupees is not blind. But what is the value of the lives of slaves? We recollect how the matter was discussed in Parliament and how Lord Morley, the then Secretary of State for India, was moved to action when once a few white-skinned soldiers suffered from the effects of excessive heat in a railway train. An Indian woman had died in agony. Let us see whether the railway authorities even now refrain from huddling together third class passengers like beasts or not. The Desh Bhagat appeals to members of the Assembly to urge Government to appoint a committee to inquire into the maladministration and corruption prevailing in the railway department so that public suffering may be alleviated. Almost every railway official takes bribes from traders, and third class passengers are treated as worse than brutes. Racial discrimination is openly shown both as between European and Indian trade firms and European and Indian passengers.

Foreign affairs.

Muslim papers continue to protest vehemently against what they call Britain's invasion of Egypt's sovereign independence. The Najat says that Egypt cannot be free so long as Britain's inauspicious steps are there and it is a pity that the toy (Agreement of 1922) which the Egyptians had accepted has been broken very soon and the temporary peace of Egypt has been disturbed. This might lead to trouble throughout the Islamic world. The Haqiqat writes:—It now appears that the Anglo-Egyptian agreement is no more than a paper treaty. If Egypt had been free and strong to-day Lord Lloyd would not have dared to hold out threats of action. The Rohilkhand Gazette believes that the Egyptians are to-day inspired by the same sturdy spirit of independence which led them to raise the standard of revolt about five years ago and points out that in view of the adverse situation in China it would not be wise for Britain to court trouble in Egypt also. Referring to the British note to Egypt coupled with the despatch of warships, the Bharat Jiwan remarks:—Warships have been despatched with the object of enforcing compliance with the British note if the Egyptians did not voluntarily submit to it. This is an example of Swaraj received as a gift. And this is the type of Swaraj which Indian moderates aspire after. Although we are afraid that Egypt will have to yield before the British fleet and military prowess, we pray to the Almighty to confer such strength and courage on Egypt as may enable her to fight for her rights. The Aj says that the action of Great Britain in severing connexion with Russia is attributable not to the so-called Arcos House disclosures, but to the failure of the British policy in China brought about by the Russians. It says that it is the spirit of Dyerism which has made Great Britain unpopular in all the Eastern countries and shaken the foundations of the British Empire in the East.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

A number of Hindu newspapers urge the prosecution of Khwaja Hasan Nizami for publishing in his paper an indecent and false report defaming Hindu women and contend that he should not be let off merely with an expression of regret by him. The Arya Musafir complains that Khwaja Hasan Nizami is in the habit of publishing false news about the Arya Samaj and holds that he will not be reformed if he is let off cheap by offering an apology. He published a false report about a ladies' carriage in an Arya Samaj procession at Gwalior bearing an improper motto and even though contradicted repeated the same canard about the Arya procession at Delhi. He escaped through an apology when he had brought a false charge against Aryas of taking beef. It is idle to believe that a man of such experience and education as the Khwaja publishes such reports by mistake. His persistent acts are deliberate and need severer punishment. The Abhaya publishes notes by Pandit Atal Ram Shastri (a pseudonym) in the course of one of which he says that his comparative study of the Quran and the Vedic dharma has led him to the conclusion that a religious Muslim is as dangerous and harmful to the world as a religious Hindu is beneficial to it. He quotes verses from the Quran to show that they enjoin the Muslims to rob and kill infidels, and says that in view of such teachings it is nothing but folly to hope for unity with Muslims. In another note the writer says that these days Maulvis are enjoining Muslims to non-cooperate with Hindus. We look eagerly forward to the day when we shall have no dealings with the Muslims. We appeal to Hindus once to non-cooperate with them and thereby put an end to their daily wranglings. The paper publishes a Hindi translation of some verses of the Quran by Pandit Vidyabrat of Dehra Dun who says that these verses go to show how partial and deceitful the Quranic god is. These verses of the Quran also make out that god is an ignorant, unjust and misleading being. This proves that the Quran is not a divine book. The Krishna (Pilibhit) urges pre-censorship of communal papers with a view to prevent the dissemination of undesirable literature as it is no good taking action after publication. The Hamdam protests against the inopportune demand of the Delhi Shuddhi Sabha for the discovery of the alleged conspiracy for the murder of Swami Shraddhanand when all police efforts have been unsuccessful and the person found guilty by the law has been condemned to death. It is to be hoped that His Excellency the Viceroy will not be influenced by this demand. The Arya Mitra opines that the action of the Muslims in appealing to the Privy Council to set aside the sentence of death passed on Abdul Rashid, the assassin of Swami Shraddhanand, will, instead of proving the innocence of Abdul Rashid, encourage other fanatics to commit similar misdeeds. In the course of an article severely criticizing the Government for not taking any action against Dr. Moonje for defying the orders of the District Magistrate of Surat under section 144, the Medina says :—The Government of Lord Irwin has become indifferent towards Muslims although the British Government in India owes its existence to their loyal and genuine services. Lord Irwin should ponder over historical facts and see whether the British Government was established through its own power or through the help of Muslims. How ungrateful does the Government prove itself when it is found to be paralysed in protecting the just rights of Indian Muslims simply because the Hindus are superior in numbers and wealth, possess a large number of newspapers and are vociferous. Government gives no credit to poor Mohammad Amin for obeying orders under section 144, but when mischievous persons like Malaviya and Dr. Moonje who started the unlawful movement of Sangathan spurn the section, the mighty British Government willingly pockets the affront. The Government scents revolution even in Maulud Sharifs of Muslims and merely on the reports of detectives of certain newspapers catches Muslims by the neck for delivering religious sermons in mosques, but it remains absolutely unconcerned when Hindus celebrate the anniversaries of a robber-chief like Shivaji and a tyrant, a rogue and a blood-thirsty person like Banda Bairagi and incite their co-religionists to kill and ruin Muslims. The Government is forced to release revolutionary Bengalis, but it does not even appoint a commission of inquiry after shedding the blood of innocent Muslims at Ponobalia. At present Government fears organization, wealth and clamour. Being overpowered by the growing high-handedness of Hindus it is ready to trample upon the sincerity, loyalty and political importance of Muslims. Do the Muslims even now believe that the British Government really sympathizes or can sympathize with them? The Krishna (Cawnpore) points out that prohibitory orders under section 144 against Dr. Moonje, who is the president of the Hindu Maha Sabha, really prejudice the interests of public peace by exacerbating public feelings. Dr. Moonje's speeches can never incite a breach of the peace. How is it then that he is so persistently pursued while no notice is taken of the grossly inflammatory utterances of Sir Abdur Rahim and other Muslim leaders? Dr. Moonje has really acted rightly in flouting the order of the Surat magistrate.

Political propaganda.

Referring to the execution of about 20 Russians by the Soviet Government in connexion with the assassination of a Soviet Minister, the Abhyudaya remarks :—India cannot but condemn the action of the Soviet Government in sending to the gallows 20 persons for the murder of an individual, but it is a wonder that the British Government should come out with a similar condemnation quite oblivious of its own misdeeds. Is Britain unaware of the number of executions ordered in India on the murder of one official? In Egypt the British Government created a pandemonium and huddled people to the gallows over the murder of one official. If England were to compare herself with Russia she would come to the inevitable conclusion that the latter was much more kind-hearted. The Vartman says that in view of their own misdeeds European nations have no right to condemn the Soviet Government for sentencing twenty anti-Bolsheviks to death. It is specially interesting to hear tales of this atrocity from the mouth of Britain which has dyed her iron hand with the innocent blood of hundreds of innocent persons in Egypt and India. The blood-stained earth of Jallianwala Bagh has not yet had time to lose its redness, yet tales of tyranny and oppression have begun to be recited. Such presumption ill-becomes Britain at any rate,

Even to-day hundreds of innocent Bengal detenus are rotting in jails. Parents continue to mourn for those misguided but enthusiastic young men who were recently hanged in the name of law and order. The men and women of the Punjab have not yet forgotten the martial law days when without any reason they were made victims of the bullets of white soldiers. Yet Britain does not seem to be ashamed of bragging. The Fratap remarks:—England returned Indians who consider it uncivilized to use indigenous cloth are undoubtedly the greatest enemies of the country. The glamour of novelty makes them blind towards the decline of Indian wealth and the decadence of Indian civilization resulting therefrom. It is the paramount duty of educated Indians to propagate Indian culture, dress, language and sentiments. An indiscriminate adoption of the Western mode of living and blind use of foreign articles is equivalent to committing suicide. The Desh Bhagat suspects that Mr. Patel is being feted in England so that he may induce his chief, Pandit Motilal Nehru, to accept the recommendations of the Statutory Commission which also has been announced before its time. The object is to win over the Indian public and to secure its cooperation in the event of a war with China or Russia. All patriots should, therefore, take immediate and concerted action to wrest the control of the Congress from Mr. Nehru and his Swaraj party. The Haqiqat says that Indians deserve to be treated as social lepers in Edinburgh because of their inferior and subject position in the Empire. They have really become dead to all sense of self-respect. Hindus and Muslims are being insulted in Edinburgh not because they are Hindus and Muslims, but because both are black Indians. Will they even now sink their differences and reply to this insult by liberating India? The Desh Bhagat states that Mr. Dange is determined to organize peasants and workers to overthrow the present British Government and appreciating his sentiments asks Government to note that the rigours of imprisonment cannot help Government to kill any one's feelings.

The Bakr-Id.

Referring to the article communicated by one Nadir Ali Khan to Al Aman in which he exhorted the Muslims to slaughter one crore of cows on the occasion of the Bakr-Id especially as the cows are believed by the Hindus to contain 70 crores of deities, the Mastana remarks:—The Muslims are welcome to slaughter as many cows as they like, but they should bear in mind that Barah Bhagwan (Boar incarnation of God) is also one of the deities contained in the cow. Besides, if the Muslims are moved to sacrifice the cow simply because it is worshipped by the Hindus as a goddess, then they will have to sacrifice their mothers as well because the Hindus treat them also as goddesses. Referring to the precautionary measures adopted by the Government on the occasion of the Bakr-Id the Abhyudaya remarks:—We are grieved at the official arrangements because they are indicative of our downfall. Is it not a matter of shame for us that our festivals should be marked by mourning instead of festivities? We cannot conceive of a greater downfall than this that on the occasion of our festivals, marriage celebrations and such other festivities we should stand in need of the help of a third party? In a subsequent issue the paper ascribes the peaceful celebration of the Bakr-Id to the good arrangements made by the officials and to the fact that the Hindus and the Muslims are now tired of communal riots and says that it is now quite clear that if Government wills it can avert a disturbance. If it had acted with the same zeal, energy and fervour in past years those riots which dyed the land of India with human blood would not have been witnessed.

Bengal detenus.

The Pratap refers to Mr. S. C. Bose's refutation of the charges levelled against the Bengal detenus by Earl Winterton and remarks:—Earl Winterton did not feel any shame in making false statements in Parliament. It is nothing but political dishonesty to associate the Bengal detenus with the murders of Mr. Day and the postmaster of Sankritola when the assassins in both the cases have already been tried and sentenced. The reasons advanced by Earl Winterton for not trying the Bengal detenus in an open law court are untenable. But what does he care for this, for his sole object is to serve his selfish ends by hook or crook. The Surya remarks that Earl Winterton's speech in Parliament in support of the repressive policy adopted by the Bengal Government was unconvincing and that his plea that the lives of the jurors and the witnesses would be endangered if the Bengal detenus were brought to trial was a baseless subterfuge unbecoming for any Government. This excuse was put forward to delude Indians into the belief that Government had ample proofs, but it is now impossible to dupe them in this fashion. The Sainik says that Earl Winterton's charges against the Bengal detenus were cowardly, mean and false.

Home Member-designate.

The Pioneer warmly welcomes the selection of Mr. James Crerar to succeed Sir Alexander Muddiman as Home Member and thinks that his ripe judgement and judicious habit of expression should be of the utmost value in bringing the controversial problems in connexion with the Reforms Commission into focus. The Leader writes:—Probably no worse choice could have been made from the Indian point of view. Mr. Crerar's appointment shows to what extent the policy of Government is dominated by reactionary influences. Mr. Crerar, like many other members of the heaven-born service, is a believer in the narrow cult of efficiency. The claims of justice and freedom, the demand for larger opportunities of self-expression and training in the art of self-government must be subordinated to it. This is the significance of the appointment which shows which way the wind is blowing. The Aj regards Mr. Crerar as a rabid type of imperialist and an opponent of India's advancement and says that it is just possible that on Sir Basil Blackett's retirement Sir Hilton-Young may be appointed as Finance Member. Sir Hilton is a famous economist of England, but his special qualification for the post is that he was the president of the commission which recommended an increase in the exchange ratio and thereby strangulated the Indian tenantry and offered facilities to foreign traders. No greater qualification is required for the post of an Indian Finance Member than this. These appointments show what lies in store for India. The high State offices have become the heritage of foreigners and as such it is useless to be sorry for them.

Indian textile industry.

Referring to the report that the Bombay Mill-owners' Association have decided upon starting a propaganda and organizing an agitation against the rejection by the Government of India of the main recommendation of the Tariff Board, the Leader writes:—We have nothing to say against this decision of the Association, but it ought also to address itself seriously to the task of bringing about reform in management, economies in and diversification of production and better exploitation of markets as suggested by the Tariff Board. Let them agitate as much as they like, but they should regard the putting of their house in order as the more important part of their work. The Bombay mills in particular stand in need of internal improvement. If the mill-owners do not take steps to effect the suggested improvement and merely confine themselves to agitation they may not get that amount of public support for their demand which they probably expect. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The mill-owners of Bombay are just having their eyes opened to the political features of the Government and find that it has not played fair. By appointing the Tariff Board the Government accepted the necessity for protective measures if, on inquiry, the Tariff Board should find for it. The Tariff Board was constituted as an impartial tribunal to pronounce on the claims made by the textile industry, and now that it has pronounced its verdict the Government cannot repudiate its findings. Commenting on the Government of India's resolution on the report of the Tariff Board rejecting the majority of its recommendations, the Pratap remarks:—Even to-day the Government is not willing to help in the manufacture of higher counts despite the recommendations of the Tariff Board and thereby expiate the sin committed by it in the year 1894 by the imposition of a 5 per cent. excise duty on yarn of 20 or higher counts manufactured in Indian mills. Indeed it is idle to expect justice from the Government of India. It has been its constant policy to destroy our cloth industry. The Aj says that while the report of the Textile Tariff Board is disappointing the Government of India's resolution thereon is simply exasperating. It is inconceivable that a Government which professes to be civilized and to be solicitous for the well-being of India should be so indifferent to one of its most important industries. But everything is possible in the irresponsible Indian administration controlled by foreigners. The money spent in the inquiry by their board has resulted in a happy message being sent to Britain and Japan, though the Indian mill-owners may well wring their hands. This is good enough. Perhaps these things may teach them that their interests are not to be furthered by always supporting the bureaucracy and swearing by constitutional agitation.

The Nagpur Satyagrah.

Referring to the Nagpur Satyagraha the Abhaya says that the authorities have "commenced their naked dance". Arrests are being made one after another. We fully sympathize with the Satyagraha. We wish that youths should be ready from every corner of the country to crush the face of the bureaucracy. Although the Surya ridicules the movement started by Mr. Avari at Nagpur with a view to secure the release of the political detenus in Bengal, it complains of the severity of sentence passed on him and attributes it to the statement of Mr. Gandhi, the high-priest of non-violence, that Mr. Avari's movement was not a non-violent one. Commenting on the sentence passed on Mr. Mancharsha Avari, the Pratap remarks:—We consider it beneath our dignity to pay attention to the invectives hurled at Mr. Avari by the magistrate, but the latter has betrayed thick-headedness by declaring Mr. Avari's movement to be violent. Mr. Avari never encouraged his followers to indulge in violence even in dream. If the police has distorted his speeches, then its reports are absolutely false. Every word of the statement made by him before the magistrate shows his fearlessness and idealism. Mr. Avari is a determined, irrepressible and brave patriot. It is possible that his movement may be crushed, but his efforts to kindle the fire of resistance in the hearts of Indians will be remembered till eternity.

The Patuakhali Satyagrah.

The Vartman publishes an appeal to the Hindus by the Secretary, Satyagraha Committee, Patuakhali, in the course of which he says:—Maddened by its failure, the Government is now bent on frightful repression and we think this is our last ordeal of fire. When the Government has accelerated its pace of repression it is our duty to strengthen our battery. This is only possible if there is a continuous stream of volunteers and money from every province and nook and corner of the country. Come forward and resolve that we shall frustrate the attempt of the bureaucracy to insult Hinduism.

Indian States.

Referring to the slapping by Mr. Taylor of certain Muslims in Indore who were accused of disobeying orders under section 144, the Najat says that such incidents are not surprising now that Muslims have lost all sense of honour, otherwise Mr. Taylor even with the armed might of the world at his back would not have dared to be guilty of such impertinence towards a follower of the Prophet. The Mansur publishes a poem in which the writer says that Muslims are being subjected to bloody oppressions in Indore and every Arya has now become a Raja in Indore. The powers that be want to wipe out even the name of Islam in Indore. The Aryas do what they choose and Muslims are being oppressed for no fault of theirs. Mosques are closed to Muslims and it is a crime in Indore to utter the name of God. The officials of Indore are arresting innocent persons and sending them to jail.

Music before mosques.

Referring to the remark said to have been made by Dr. Ansari that marriage processions had always passed before mosques with music and that it was only recently that they were being interfered with, the Aligarh Mail writes:—If Dr. Ansari has been correctly reported, we may point out for his edification and that of his Hindu audience that it is because the marriage processions of the Hindus have begun to be recently accompanied by mischievous and provocative music that the Muslims have only recently interfered with them. Let music be not played before mosques against established custom. Let it not be played provocatively. And, last of all, let it not be played when namaz is going on. If the playing of music before mosques is limited by these conditions, we believe there will be no trouble over it. It is not so much the music as the sangathanist provocation and mischief that accompanies it which annoys and exasperates Muslims.

Foreign affairs.

The Muslim Press expresses a feeling of humiliation at the submission of Egypt to the British terms which is however tempered by the hope that one day Egyptians will make bold to win their freedom. The Hamdam deplores the helplessness of Egypt against British might and her consequent submission to the continued control of her army by Britain but says that with the growing national consciousness among Egyptians the day is not far off when they will strain every nerve to exchange their present make-believe independence for true freedom. The Najat condemns the belligerent attitude adopted by Lord Lloyd ever since his arrival in Egypt and the ultimate despatch of British warships to that country and commends the refusal of Egyptians to be intimidated by British browbeating. It is now impossible to stem the tide of freedom in Egypt and Britain can best preserve her prestige there by gradually evacuating the country. The time for warlike demonstrations is now gone as Egyptians have now developed the power of sacrifice and patriotism. Egyptians should prefer death to dishonour and should not allow the independence of their country to be compromised. The Desh Bhagat recalls the Serajevo murder which set all Europe ablaze in 1914 and writes:—It appears that Poland has been entrapped into the claws of British statesmen through Signor Mussolini and that the Warsaw murder has probably been planned to help Britain's design of forcing Russia into war. It believes the Russian statement about British complicity in the murder and says that Britain would be mostly responsible for the next world war. It is a pity that European mammon worship will once more drench the earth in blood. Alas, the Indian nationalists are hopelessly disorganized otherwise they could have taught a lesson to tyrannical powers by helping oppressed nationalities.

The Rangila Rasul case.

Muslim opinion against Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement in the Rangila Rasul case is gaining in volume and intensity and the demand for an amendment of section 153A, Indian Penal Code, is becoming insistent. Sir Malcolm Hailey's reply to the Muslim deputation has, however, assuaged feeling to some extent. The Najat observes that the indifference with which Government has treated Muslim protests regarding Hyderabad and Egypt and the Rangila Rasul shows that the Muslim voice has no strength at its back which alone can command respect. Rajpal, the publisher of such a profane book as the Rangila Rasul, has been acquitted after conviction and the court of (Justice) Dalip Singh has announced as a further reward that such people can freely publish such books as the law provides no penalty for them. Muslims should for once unite and convince Government that their protests are not meant only to be spurned. Muslims cannot live contentedly in a country in which their Prophet is openly attacked in such books as the Rangila Rasul and Government encourages their publication with the might of its law. Muslims will have to answer one day before God. The Medina characterizes Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement as a wonder of the age and says:—We hope that the Punjab Muslims will expose every superficial argument adduced in the judgement and will show to the Government that the author of such a blasphemous book after sprinkling salt over the wounded hearts of Muslims is exposing the law and justice of the Government to ridicule. The Punjab High Court has dealt such a heavy blow at sections of the Indian Penal Code that its very marrow has been shattered. The reply which Sir Malcolm Hailey has given to the Muslim deputation is most disappointing and shows what a wrong view His Excellency takes regarding the preservation of law and order. Today every Muslim child in India is restless and agitated over this judgement of Kunwar Dalip Singh because the unrestrained pen of the High Court has destroyed the sanctity of the Prophet and has revealed the helplessness of the law. It is to be hoped that irrespective of Government aid, and relying on their own strength of arms, the Punjab Muslims will thoroughly expose the obvious partiality of this judgement and will show to the world that the criminal law of the Indian Government is powerless to protect religion. Referring to Sir Malcolm Hailey's reply to the Muslim deputation in connexion with the judgement the paper writes :—It is to be seen how His Excellency the Governor fulfils his promise. Now Muslims are not faced with the question of the Rangila Rasul only, they have also to see how they can stop such irritating publications in future. Muslims of the Punjab should consider it a sin to eat and sleep until they are able to protect the honour of their Prophet. It will also be desirable to hold an impartial inquiry into the judgement of Kunwar Dalip Singh. In a subsequent article the paper congratulates the editor and printer of the Muslim Outlook on their trial for the criticism of the judgement of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh and says : —It is a blessed day for every true Muslim when he is involved in trial by foreigners for proclaiming the truth and serving Islam. The régime of Sir Malcolm Hailey has proved so unhappy and unfortunate for Muslims that the Muslim Outlook could not possibly escape its wrath. The Punjab Government has sought to administer a balm to wounded hearts by instituting a case against the only English paper of Muslims. Proofs are constantly forthcoming in support of our assertion that the Government of India is becoming indifferent towards the protection of the religious sentiments and civic rights of Muslims and that the clamour and fury of Sangathanists has made it deaf to the call of justice. The Mashriq regrets that Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's ruling has left writers free to revile religious personalities. Al Adl fears that if Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's ruling is allowed to stand communal conflict will lead to anarchy in the country. Al Bashir asks for an amendment of the law and says that it is a pity that Government did not dry up this stream of vilification at its very fount by proscribing the Satyartha Prakash. The Haqiqat thanks Sir Malcolm Hailey for his sympathetic attitude towards the grievances of Muslims regarding the Rangila Rasul and urges that something must be done to stop such inflammatory publications. The Hamdam is satisfied with Sir Malcolm Hailey's reply to the Muslim deputation and wants the Punjab Government to devise means to impress on law courts in that province the real object of section 153A.

The Baqr-Id.

Commenting on the official version of the Dinapur riot the Abhyudaya remarks :—We have become so distrustful of official reports that we do not feel inclined to accept them word for word. The official version of the Dinapur riot is in keeping with the traditional policy of the Government to put the entire blame on Indians where they come in conflict with the authorities and on the Hindus when the Hindus and the Muslims are concerned. We wish that the Congress or some other national organization should hold an inquiry into the matter and submit an impartial report. The Aj says that if the official version regarding the cause of the riot be true every Hindu will have to express regret at the excitability of the local Hindus. The excitement displayed by Hindus at the sacrifice of a cow by a Muslim in his house especially when they themselves make use of impure foreign sugar in their religious rites was quite out of place and what is most deplorable is the fact that while one Muslim sacrificed a cow another innocent Muslim was assaulted for it. The paper refers to the attempts at Benares and Gurdaspur on the occasion of the Baqr-Id to wound the religious susceptibilities of Hindus by throwing limbs of slaughtered calves into their temples or quarters and urges the police to get the delinquents concerned adequately punished. If in tracing communal offenders they were to show even one-fourth of the zeal which they display in suppressing imaginary political offences communal mischievousness would be greatly reduced. In the course of an editorial note on the disturbance at Dinapur and certain incidents connected with the Baqr-Id at some other places the Medina writes :—The reports from Dinapur have proved very disquieting and show that the high-handedness of Hindus has exceeded all bounds. The Sangathanist stalwarts demonstrated their barbarism and by dyeing their hands with the innocent blood of an old woman roused the satanic spirit of Malaviya Sangathan. At Nakewa in the Basti district a satanic band of Hindus attacked Muslim houses and hampered sacrifice. Notwithstanding this, the magistrate arrested Muslims and had the sacrificial flesh buried through chamars. This desecration of the sacrificial flesh deserves commendation in the régime of Sir William Marris. It is reported that Muslims were attacked at Deoband and Sikandrabad also. Will the Government of India treat these incidents with indifference and in spite of successive proofs of the high-handedness of Hindus apply the dagger of justice to the innocent throats of Muslims? The Sada-i-Muslim complains of the action of the Muslim district magistrate of Basti in arresting Muslims at village Nakewa for sacrificing a cow in a closed house simply because cow-sacrifice had not been performed there previously. The Hindus who had collected and assaulted Muslims there were allowed to go scot-free. The local Government should look into this matter and the Muslim right of cow-sacrifice in privacy should be universally recognized and this foolish talk of precedent should cease once for all. While congratulating the Delhi authorities on preserving the public peace during the Baqr-Id by their adequate arrangements, the Hamdam says that they have not eliminated the sources of communal tension, but rather added to them by closing the Hauz Qazi and Gali Batashan to sacrificial cows against long-established precedent. The Haqiqat deplores the persistent refusal of the Punjab Government to allow cow-sacrifice at Panipat and contends that it has no right to interfere with the religious freedom of any community. The Hindus are not fair in demanding that cow-sacrifice should be stopped in return for their discontinuing music before mosques. The former is a religious duty with the Muslims which the latter is not with the Hindus.

Political propaganda.

The Indian Daily Telegraph commends the civil disobedience campaign at Madura and Nagpur and writes:—Our hope lies in this occasional outburst of sacrifice. It shows that the ground is not fallow and that the soil is fertile enough for the production of more Gandhis—younger and more vigorous. We want such demonstration farms of Indian patriotism in every province: as yet only the Central Provinces and Madras possess it. The Sainik calls attention to the part played by students in the Chinese revolution and emphasizes the need of organizing young men of India and enlisting them in the battle for the freedom of their motherland. The Aj refers to the various stages of the nationalist agitation in China and say that its present success lies in enlisting the support of peasants and workers. The same path will have to be followed in India too. There has been armed revolution in China, but in India this is neither possible nor desirable. However, the Indian revolution like the Chinese revolution will have to be worked up from the bottom of the society. Indian peasants and workers will have to be organized to ensure success in the nationalist agitation. Referring to the report published in the New Statesman (London) that the missing document in connexion with which the Russian legation was raided was the Indian chapter in the official war book which dealt with the ways of suppressing rebellion in India the paper says that this should be of interest to those Indians who dream of getting Swaraj by pleasing their rulers. The fact that this scheme was prepared by the British war department shows that the reins of government in India are held not by the Secretary of State or the Government of India, but by British generals. Even God cannot grant success to constitutional agitation when rulers far from governing people according to their wishes secretly plan schemes to suppress disturbances. The Shankar attributes the existing miseries and sufferings of humanity to the Parliamentary system of administration which it says is a consolidated power under the shelter of which a few plutocrats perpetrate arbitrary atrocities upon the toiling masses and which cannot be as easily overthrown as absolute monarchy. In the course of an article vehemently criticizing Sir Michael O'Dwyer's remark that the present communal disturbances are due to the inauguration of Reforms the Medina writes:—To throw the entire responsibility for the disturbances on the Reforms is a reprehensible attempt at concealing the faults of the Government which is bound to prove its ruin in future. So far as we think it was the Government which, on becoming afraid of the non-cooperation movement, sowed the seed of disturbances. The policy and methods which the Government of India and Lord Reading adopted for crushing the movement are largely responsible for the present disturbances. While Hindu leaders were warned against Afghan and Persian peril some arm-chair Muslim leaders were warned that the Hindu majority would ruin the Muslims. Such is the work of the Government and the entire responsibility for these disturbances, therefore, lies on it. The Sarfaraz condemns the aerial bombing of the Mohmand country as barbarous and cruel as it involves the slaughter of the innocent along with the guilty and such a procedure can never be countenanced by any one at all influenced by the quality of human sympathy. What was said of the bombing expeditions of German aeroplanes into Britain during the Great War is too recent to have faded out of public memory. Terrorism may overawe people but cannot win their hearts.

Reforms.

In the course of a long letter to the Pioneer on the Statutory Commission Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru writes:—I sincerely trust that there is no truth whatever in the rumour which is daily gaining strength that it is proposed to exclude Indians from the commission. An exclusively Parliamentary commission with no Indian element in it can make no appeal to any section of Indian opinion and it must start on its work with the very serious handicap that it will not carry with it Indian confidence and support. I cannot help feeling that if the Central Legislature and the Local Legislatures are consulted they could furnish a list of 25 men, Hindus, Muslims, Christians and Parsis out of whom the Government should not find it difficult to make their selection . . . If the commission is to present a scheme of a more or less durable character it must be allowed to study and report upon the possibilities of the amendment of the constitution of the Central Government and its relations to the Secretary of State on the one hand and the provincial Governments on the other. The Leader supports the views of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and writes:—We think that unless the Indian point of view is adequately represented on the commission it will arouse a great deal of opposition in the country and that it would be a serious mistake to exclude Indians from it or to appoint only one Indian, however respected and eminent he may be, as an eye-wash. What is essential is that the commission should be so constituted as to make Indians feel that their point of view will be properly represented on it and that its terms of reference should be wide and comprehensive. The Abhyudaya writes:—It is not unlikely that the Statutory Commission may be exclusively Parliamentary denuded of Indian element and if the rumour regarding the appointment of Lord Reading as the chairman of the commission is well-founded we must bid good-bye to all hopes of deriving any benefit from it. We are inclined to think that the next instalment of Reforms will be no improvement upon its predecessor.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Abhyudaya publishes an article communicated by Mr. K. P. Dikshit in the course of which he exhorts Hindus to cultivate physical strength and remarks:—If any one wants to protect himself and his honour he will have to use arms and lathis. It is equally necessary to impart physical training to Hindu girls. They should also be trained in handling daggers and knives. As soon as they are strong enough to use a dagger no one will dare to look at them with an evil eye to say nothing of abducting them or outraging their modesty. The Anand writes:—A new party is being organized among Muslims which after fully co-operating with the bureaucracy will work for crushing Hindus. The Muslims have thought it proper to serve their selfish ends by propitiating the British. They have always stood in the way of every national movement with the honourable exception of the non-cooperation movement which was allied with the Khilafat movement. Hindus should now realize that they cannot count upon Muslim cooperation in launching out a national movement. On the other hand they should guard against any mischief being wrought by them. It is time that Hindus of all sections and of all shades of political opinion should unite and strive to discomfit both the Muslims and the bureaucracy. The Zarif complains that the Swaraj (Delhi) of May 22 contains a cartoon with offensive couplets and says:—To incite Sikhs to violate the chastity of Muslim women is really to provoke widespread bloodshed. The Akhbar-i-Ittihadul Islam of May 13, 1927, reproduces from the local Malang a Punjabi poem in which there is incitement to hold the sharp sword in the hand and to break the heads of tyrannical Muslims. Government should take immediate notice of these. The Najat says that Muslims in the Punjab need not be afraid of the Hindu movement to effect an economic boycott of them as it will really do them good by rousing them from their torpor. They should keep quiet just now but once the Hindus begin to act they should manfully face them.

The Nagpur Satyagraha.

The Jain Path Pradarshak publishes in its editorial columns a communicated article in which the writer refers in commendatory terms to the written statement filed by Manchersha Avari in the case against him and says that it is characterized by gravity and truthfulness. The correspondent prays that every Indian home may produce such heroic souls and says that it is the duty of every public worker to ponder over Mr. Avari's statement and decide whether or not it is advisable to court imprisonment by violating the provisions of the Arms Act, when non-cooperation also results in imprisonment, and thereby create greater awakening in the country. A correspondent writing to the Pratap under the pseudonym "Balravi" refers in eulogistic terms to the part played by Avari in conducting the Nagpur Satyagraha movement and says :—If Mr. Avari dies in jail as a result of hunger-strike India will no doubt be a loser but discontent will increase in the country. If McSwiney could set Ireland ablaze surely Mr. Avari's soul will cause a conflagration in India tomorrow if not today. The Hindi Kesari says that the sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment passed on Mr. Avari is simply terrible and out of all proportion to the offence committed by him. However, Mr. Avari was not well advised in starting this movement to secure the release of the Bengal detenus, especially when Satyagraha was not started in Bengal itself for the purpose.

Bengal detenus.

Commenting on the Indian debate in Parliament regarding the Bengal detenus the Aj writes :—So long as personal liberty is so unsafe in this country it is impossible for any Indian patriot to give thought to the question of Reforms and Royal Commissions. So long as the lawless law which deprives people of liberty even without trial continues to disgrace the statute-book in this country it is not only improper but also insulting to talk of working the Reforms. Public opinion as expressed in legislative bodies is repeatedly flouted by the authorities and yet Lord Winterton says that the legislative bodies exercise an influence over the administration which was not even conceived of at the time of the inauguration of the Reforms. This is how truth is perverted and falsehood is made to appear to be the truth. Such things cannot but bring the day nearer when Indians firmly holding to non-violence will refuse to pay taxes and to cooperate with the irresponsible bureaucracy. Then the British public will come to know how the Indian authorities have been duping it all along regarding India. But so long as India does not practise non-cooperation of the said character she will continue to hear such debates and wring her hands in despair.

Patuakhali Satyagraha.

One Nishkantakji "Visharad" writing in the Sudharak refers to the threatening letters received by certain Hindu leaders of the Patuakhali Satyagraha movement and remarks ;—The report of the receipt of these threatening letters painfully reminds one of the weakness of the Hindus, of the conduct of the Bengal Government and of the intolerance and brutality of the Muslims. We draw the attention of the Bengal Government towards the danger of the enactment of bloody scenes by Muslim hooligans in future and warn the Muslims that the satanic deeds of Aurangzeb cannot be successfully repeated in this twentieth century. Tyranny stimulates religious fervour and if through the good fortune of the Hindus the mosque and the river of Patuakhali become red with their blood then the children of Islam should know that one drop of a martyr's blood will produce such a fire as will consume all the mosques.

The Indian police.

Swami Satyadeva writing in the Aj says that his experience of the Indian police has impressed upon him that its moral degradation has reached a very deplorable level and that innocent people suffer grievous wrongs at its hands. In 1923 the Indian police made a false report against him to the British Government that he had received money from Bolsheviks. It made several other similar charges against him in order to make him out to be a very dangerous character. Now that a passport has been granted to him by the Punjab Government he will go to England and expose the doings of Indian police before the British public and the Secretary of State for India. On June 8 he was very clumsily shadowed by a detective at Cawnpore. He concludes :—Now I am engaged only in the work of Hindu Sangathan and suffer badly from eye troubles and yet detectives are busy in misleading the Government. How long is this drama to be enacted? In view of the weakness and worthlessness of the Indian police it is plain that this edifice must topple down soon. The Indian Government should set its house in order, otherwise its farce of administration cannot be carried on for long with the support of such rotten and worthless police.

The Bharat Dharma vigorously opposes the Children Protection Bill which has been scheduled for discussion in the next session of the Madras Legislative Council and remarks that if the Bill is passed into law a large number of Indian children is bound to be taken possession of by the Government on the charge of vagrancy and handed over to the Christian missionaries, with the result that on attaining majority they will find themselves completely denationalized and incapable of thinking in terms of their country and their religion. The paper adds that the Hindus have suffered more at the hands of the Christian missionaries who receive encouragement from the Government than at the hands of the Muslim proselytizers.

The Children Prctection Bill.

Al Bashir says that the Hindus are really weakening Muslims by provoking them into riots over music before mosques and if the latter continue to yield to provocation they will be gradually reduced to the state of their co-religionists in Spain. Wisdom therefore lies in avoiding violence and in utilizing communal enthusiasm for organization work.

Music before mosques.

The Farishta has a contributed article in which the writer complains about the paucity of Muslim clerks in the office of the Accountant-General, Central Revenues, and regrets that in spite of the instructions of the Home Department of the Government of India no Muslims were appointed to the recent vacancies in that office.

The Rangila Rasul case.

The action taken by the Punjab High Court against the Muslim Outlook has evoked bitter and angry protests in the Muslim Press and has greatly intensified the agitation regarding the Rangila Rasul case. The Hindu Press, on the other hand, strongly supports the High Court's decision. The Leader writes:—We do not know if Sir Malcolm Hailey realizes that he committed a constitutional impropriety and a tactical blunder in receiving the Muslim deputation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul judgement and in expressing his disapproval of it and his view of the law which was calculated to prejudice the trial of the Vartman case. His object was a laudable one, namely, to reassure the Muslims that if the law was found to be defective he would take steps to have it amended. If all Muslims were reasonable and fairminded they would have been satisfied with the assurance given. But His Excellency forgot the fanatics, and that it is never safe to parley with fanaticism. These have taken advantage of his statement and probably read into it signs of weakness. The Muslim Outlook not content with continuing its attacks on Mr. Justice Dalip Singh, is running down the High Court itself. It is obvious that Government cannot and ought not to yield to wild threats and fanatical demands. If it does, it will strike at the root of law and order. At the same time any strong policy of repression at the present stage would be unwise. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We view with alarm the birth of a sinister agitation in Lahore which must have disastrous consequences unless curbed at once. To call to the followers of Allah to look with contempt on the Lahore High Court is a serious affair and the speeches at the Lahore meeting and the attitude of some of the leaders clearly show that their object is to bring about a crisis. And this they can easily do for they have the materials on hand. Sir Malcolm Hailey was playing with fire when he made that irresponsible speech in reply to the Muslim deputation. He honestly thought that his assurance might satisfy the community; he went very near contempt of court himself. It would, indeed, be a miracle if the feelings that have been roused among the Lahore Muslims should subside. An entire community has taken the High Court judgement as an affront to their God. They have the authority of the Governor of the Province that their grievance is right and that steps are being taken to amend the law. In the course of an article headed "Price of defending Prophet's honour" the Aligarh Mail writes:—The imprisonment which Mr. D. S. Bukhary and Mr. Nur-ul-Haq have incurred owing to the enraged sensitiveness of the Punjab High Court on the point of honour of which it has its own conception is, in our opinion, the price which these valiant sons of Islam have paid for defending the honour of our Holy Prophet. The brave stand which they took in criticising Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip's judgement cannot but be characterised from the Muslim view-point as an undaunted and fearless way to redeem the prestige of the fair name of our Holy Prophet. The Punjab High Court, we fear, suffers from a wrong notion if it thinks that the punishment which it has given to Messrs. Bukhary and Nur-ul-Haq can damp their spirit or melt the mettle of which they are made . . . And the wonder of it all is that Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh acquitted Rajpal after "whole-heartedly" condemning him. Rajpal's acquittal after Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh's whole-hearted condemnation of his brand of authorship becomes, therefore, a mystery. It appears to have a thick veil over it. In trying to probe and unveil the mystery, we only suggest that Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh, in passing his judgement, has not only betrayed a shallow understanding of section 153A of the Indian Penal Code, but has also proved quite unequal to the task of realizing how far the ridicule poured in the pages of the Rangila Rasul on our Holy Prophet can naturally excite hatred among Muslims against Rajpal and his community and to what extent his outrage on Prophet Mahomed's reputation can stir in Muslim hearts feelings of the deepest resentment. We Muslims, who are extremely offended and wounded by Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh's judgement, may well complain of it and address him in the words of the present writer's couplet meaning "Who expected from you that you would lay balm on our wound; we did not expect either that you would pour salt." The Abhyudaya is of opinion that the public meeting held by the Muslims of Lahore in which a resolution was passed exhorting the Muslim press to republish the offensive article for which the editor and the printer of the Muslim Outlook had been sentenced was unlawful and remarks:—We want to inquire of the Government what action it has taken against that meeting. As soon as that resolution was passed all the members of that meeting virtually became members of an unlawful assembly. Why did not the police disperse the meeting? The Aj says that every sensible Indian will support the decision of the Punjab High Court in the matter of the contempt of court committed by the Muslim Outlook. The Medina says that by acquitting the author of such a mischievous and blasphemous book as the Rangila Rasul Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh has not only exposed the bankruptcy of the law, but has also most severely pained the feelings of seven crores of His Majesty's subjects. He has also torn to shreds the declarations of the Kings of England and Queen Victoria about the protection of religion and regard for religious beliefs. Besides, the greatest mischief that will be wrought in the country by this illegal judgement of Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh will be the liberation of the unbridled tongue of every foul-mouthed Arya preacher to insult the Muslim Prophet. By his sightless judgement and blind attitude Justice Dalip Singh has established that he is not fit to occupy the bench of a court which is the final legal resort for about two crores of human beings. The lower courts had rightly convicted the author of the Rangila Rasul under section 153A, but Justice Dalip Singh has to-day exposed the helplessness of this section also and it has been proved that as the penal laws of Britain are unable to safeguard and protect religious sentiments, and as she cannot protect the honour of the Prophet, she has no right to demand loyalty from seven crores of Muslims. Probably every sensible and reasonable man will agree with the brave (ghazi) editor of the Muslim Outlook that a Judge like Justice Dalip Singh who at the time of elucidating the law and delivering his short-sighted judgement is totally oblivious of all the consequences that might ensue in the future from his action is not fit to occupy the Chair of Justice. Sir Malcolm Hailey has acknowledged the naked short-sightedness of this judgement. It was only advertising the contempt of court and taking revenge for honest criticism of a most detestable blunder to single out the editor of the Muslim Outlook for action. We know that the inexorable masters of power and prestige and law and order taking advantage of the weakness of Muslims, want to please the vociferous section of Hindus. In this connexion we want to tell the Punjab Government and the full bench of the Punjab High Court that by punishing the editor and publisher of the Muslim Outlook they have greatly narrowed the scope of the law, and if they regard the penal law of India as of world-wide application, we want to declare on our own behalf and on behalf of our zealous readers that we are all guilty of this offence and believe that for the true prestige, greatness and upholding of the law it is necessary that Kunwar Dalip Singh should immediately resign, and we also therefore repeat the word "resign." The Hamdan deplores the action of the Punjab High Court against the Muslim Outlook and says that its Judges cannot solve the present vexed problem by attaching greater importance to the prestige of their colleague than to that of the Prophet to whom four hundred million human beings own allegiance. The Haqiqat publishes a communicated article in which the writer urges that the law should be amended with a view to penalise literature which may provoke the feelings of any community. The amendment while keeping in view administrative difficulties and adequate punishment of the guilty persons should not be such as to lend itself to abuse by the authorities.

Reforms.

Referring to the rumour regarding the selection of General Smuts as the President of the forthcoming Royal Commission on Reforms the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—It seems to us that it will be a humiliation for the Indians with an ancient civilization and a splendid record even under British rule to show cause before a Boer why larger political powers should not be vested in them. General Smuts, it must be recalled, has not been fair to Indians; he has a prejudice against them. The Aj says that the existing Legislative bodies do no good to the country; on the contrary they provide an opportunity to the bureaucracy to trample upon the opinion of elected members and display its arbitrariness and military strength. They also provide an opportunity to the Governors and the Governor General to override their decisions and demonstrate their terrible special powers. In them the true representatives of the people are repeatedly insulted by officials. If the next Statutory Commission recommends the abolition of these Legislative bodies and the vesting of all powers in the Governors to govern according to their will, we at least shall be satisfied with it. To-day the authorities play their game under the cover of these bodies. If the latter were abolished the authorities would have to come into the open field and we and the world would be able to see the black character of the white administration of India. But this is not likely to be done, for their object is to vex us, to harass us and to humiliate us before the world. For this reason they will not put an end to this sham. They govern us arbitrarily, with physical force, but do not want to say so. They want to proclaim their liberality, and for this purpose they have spread this net of hypocrisy. They will not remove it. The Anand says that the Royal Commission will not enjoy the confidence of the Indian nation and that its utility will be seriously questioned if Indian leaders are not represented on it. If the commission is to prove acceptable to the people at least half of its members should be Indians. The Pratap remarks:—Indian politicians have built great hopes on the Statutory Commission, but as long as the country does not become powerful the farce of commissions is futile. Therefore why should we not boldly dispel the lure of this mirage? The recording of our evidence by the Commission will in no way loosen the bonds of our slavery. Is it not therefore rational that the Indian National Congress should boycott the forthcoming Royal Commission? It is possible that mendicancy and flattery may enable us to secure a few concessions, but the self-respect of India cannot be satisfied with crumbs. It will, indeed, be impolitic to secure a few rights by suffering national humiliation. The Haqiqat though not expecting much from the forthcoming Statutory Commission urges Indians to extract the most from it by presenting a united front. They should give up all minor religious disputes and present a common national demand.

Political propaganda.

The Aj says that history does not record a single instance in which a defeated nation has been treated worse than the Germans were treated by the Allies after the war. Their complete ruin was brought about by those who hold themselves to be the guardians of civilization and the chosen apostles of God, who joined the war in the name of the protection of the liberty of weaker nations, and who appealed to their subject nations for help in the war in the name of generosity. When signs of victory were visible all sentiments of liberty and generosity were forgotten and demands were openly made for the destruction of Germany for the satisfaction of demoniacal greed. What followed constitutes a disgrace to human nature. The terrible League of Nations of Imperialists took the place of generosity and the remaining weak nations were made victims of its mandates. Reviewing Lord Lytton's article on India in the Daily Mirror (London) the paper writes:—If Indians think that they will benefit by remaining within the British Empire, they should make a clear and definite pronouncement to this effect and show by their conduct that they want to remain within the British Empire. But if they consider that their interests are injured by remaining within the Empire, they should follow a course which would render British administration impossible in the country and would compel Englishmen to grant swaraj to it. This question can be decided by a sifting inquiry into the policy of the British Empire, firstly, in respect of India, and secondly, in respect of Asia. The Vartman calls upon young men to discard fear of death and come forward to preach communism and thereby emancipate the country and remove the sufferings of the crores of people who do not get full meals. The present unrest, continues the paper, is a spark of the fierce flame of communism which will set fire to capitalism and will not be quenched until all sorts of class distinctions and inequalities have been removed. In a subsequent article the paper takes Indian youths severely to task for not doing anything for the freedom of the country, and says that for this reason the young men of China and Russia look upon them with contempt. Proceeding it says:—The national goddess of war wants your blood. This world is for those who fight and win. Criticizing Lord Lytton's article in the Daily Mirror the Medina writes:—Government is wrested and not bestowed. When India fulfils the necessary conditions she will attain liberty even without the consent of Britain. After long experience Indians have lost all faith in British goodness and generosity. Breach of promises and tyranny cannot engender love. The Haqiqat says that Indians are being banned from the public services of Iraq simply because they are a subject race and do not deserve consideration. If they want to have their claims in Iraq recognized they should first try to gain their freedom.

Proposed Medical Mission to China.

The Abhyudaya disapproves of the attitude of the Government towards the proposed medical mission to China and remarks:—The hesitation of the Government in the matter of granting passports to the members of the mission is born of its suspicion about the nature of the mission. Mr. Goswami has explained to the authorities in a convincing manner that there is cultural unity between India and China and that the mission is being sent not for a political but for a humanitarian purpose. The object is commendable and Government's suspicion therefore betrays the familiar callousness of its heart. The Aj says that the refusal of passports to the members of the Congress Medical Mission to China reveals the petty-mindedness of the authorities. It also shows that they do not want that the wounded Chinese should be medically attended to, and that too by Indians. They apprehend that this will promote greater sympathy between India and China. There is no doubt that if they finally refuse to grant passports the mission will not be able to go to China, but it will not prevent the growth of sympathy between the two countries. The Pratap remarks:—It appears that the Government of India will not allow the message of sympathy of the Indian National Congress to reach China. India is an enslaved country. What right has she to meddle in international politics? Were there any such provision in law such persons as talked of helping the enemies would have been shot down for "high treason."

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Agra Samachar takes strong exception to the view expressed by the Musalman that it is the supreme duty of the Muslims to break idols and to its exhortations that they should unhesitatingly break idols wherever they see them and remarks:—It is against humanity to sow fresh seeds of discord when communal disturbances resulting in bloodshed are the order of the day. The Vartman takes Hindus to task for their inaction in spite of their idols being broken and says:—If a Hindu can remain alive even on seeing his idols broken, he cannot be called a Hindu. He is not a true Hindu who does not get excited on seeing top-knots being cut, sacred threads being broken and temples being destroyed and who even on seeing the knives of men belonging to other religions floating on the blood of his own children is absorbed in the worship of soulless non-violence. A Hindu is one who is not afraid of death. In the case of goondas bricks should be answered by stones and slaps by blows. Can we to-day claim to be descendants of Shivaji, Guru Govind Singh and Banda Bairagi? Referring to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's tour in Mysore the Medina writes:—From the very beginning Pandit Malaviya has been thinking of establishing Hindu raj, and now this idea has assumed the form of a firm determination. At present Mr. Malaviya is touring Indian states. The object of this also seems to be the establishment of Hindu raj which it is possible may be realized within a century owing to the headlessness and helplessness of non-Hindu communities. We consider it our duty to warn Muslims of this danger.

The Bagr-Id.

The Mashriq regrets that the Muslim district officers at Benares and Basti interfered with cow-sacrifice. It is a pity that no action was taken at Basti against the Hindus who had invaded the house in which sacrifice had been performed. The Hamdam complains that the Hindus assaulted Muslims at village Banjaria, tahsil Baheri, in the Bareilly district, simply because they had, as usual, brought beef from a neighbouring village and asks for an impartial and detailed inquiry into the incident.

The Postal Cash Certificates.

The Aj protests against the reduction of the rate of interest on postal cash certificates and holds that this action has been taken under pressure of capitalists and not so much in the interests of the general tax-payer.

The Rangila Rasul case.

PROTESTS in the Muslim Press against the judgements of the Punjab High Court in the Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases are growing in volume and vehemence. Non-Muslim papers unanimously condemn the Muslim agitation in the Punjab in this connexion. The Pioneer remarks: Punjab Muslims seem to be bent on alienating from themselves the sympathy of those who, like Sir Malcolm Hailey, are solicitous for the preservation of their religion from offensive attacks in the Press. The disgraceful agitation against Mr. Justice Dalip Singh is losing none of its virulence and it does little credit to the community. The Leader writes: No right-minded Hindu can but sympathize with the feeling of abhorrence and indignation of Muslims when scurrilous and filthy attacks are levelled against their great Prophet. But we find little justification for the sort of agitation which has been got up in connexion with the Rangila Rasul judgement and the threats of violence which are being held out. It is impossible to conceive of a more absurd and fantastic demand than that a Judge of the Punjab High Court should be asked to resign simply because he honestly took a view of the law which has not commended itself to a section of a particular community. The minatory resolutions which are being passed at Muslim meetings give evidence of a mentality for the development of which the weak policy of certain Government officials in some provinces is not wholly without responsibility. If the Government wants to rule it must make it clear without a shadow of doubt that its policy will not be influenced by, and that it will not yield to, violence or threats of violence. The Aligarh Mail publishes, in its editorial columns, the text of Maulana Mufti Kifayat Ullah's announcement regarding Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement in the Rangila Rasul case and, commenting on it, writes: Our wound is deep and yawning. It can only be healed by the conviction and punishment of Rajpal and the subjection of Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh to an injection of clear understanding by which he may be rid of the disease of the misinterpretation of section 153(A) of the Indian Penal Code from which he appears to be seriously suffering. That injection, we believe, can be effected only if His Lordship consents to go on a long leave and not resume his duties as a Judge of the Lahore High Court before he has understood the obvious meaning of section 153(A). The Aj says that the tremendous agitation, albeit an artificial one, in regard to the Rangila Rasul case, despite the assurance of the Governor of the Punjab and the expression of regret by the publisher of the book, shows that there is no chance of unity between Hindus and Muslims unless Mahatma Gandhi's advice regarding change of hearts is acted upon. This is possible only when an enduring and all-embracing agitation is carried on to eradicate the poison of communalism from the country. How long shall we, blinded by the glamour of Councils, committees and commissions, continue to ignore this supreme duty? The Surya characterizes the Muslim agitation for the promulgation of an ordinance regarding offensive communal publications to be as stupid as the demand for the resignation of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh and hopes that the Viceroy will not commit the blunder of issuing such an ordinance as it would be a greater blunder than that perpetrated by the Governor of the Punjab in receiving the Muslim deputation. At the conclusion of a lengthy editorial article violently criticizing the judgements of the Punjab High Court in the Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases, and discussing various means for safe-guarding the honour of the Prophet from the "campaign of vilification inaugurated by Sangathanists," the Medina writes: Now there remains only one remedy, namely, that Muslims of the whole of India should combine and rouse every palpable and latent power of their wealth, their lives, their property, their children, and the world and array themselves in iron rows against this campaign which is mean, subversive of law and order and civilization, and calculated to ruin India. Law, custom, rights of fellow-citizenship and other civic considerations of the kind are for cowards who do not want to do anything in this world and who have no regard whatever for the honour and sanctity of the Prophet. Laws and regulations have proved bankrupt. Rights of fellow-citizenship have become defunct since the proclamation of war and enmity by the fellow-citizens Civic considerations are for that country where the honour of a community is safe. Therefore, if the elders of the community wish to organize a band of devotees who may be seen carrying their heads in the hollows of their hands in defence of the honour of their Prophet then the Medina is the first to offer its services and also its editorial staff. To sacrifice oneself in the love of the Prophet is the highest aim of life in this and the other world. The Hamdam is surprised that, in spite of their knowledge of the veneration of Muslims for their Prophet, the Hindu leaders have not protested against the action of the authors of the Vichitra Jiwan, Rangila Rasul and Vartman in wounding Muslim sentiments. Inter-communal unity is possible only if Hindus decide to respect Muslim religious feelings, and it is being greatly prejudiced by the Sangathanist propaganda against the present Muslim agitation. The paper attributes the scant courtesy shown by non-Muslim writers to the Prophet to the fact that the desecrations of the Saudites have brought about a general decline in reverence of the Prophet. The best way for Muslims to secure greater veneration for the Prophet is to stop Saudite propaganda in India and thus convince the world that they themselves have due regard for their Prophet. The decision of the Punjab High Court in the Rangila Rasul case is an instance of the mentality which has been bred in the country by our short-sightedness. Al Khalil regrets that though Rajpal's crime is far greater than that of Abdul Rashid there was no law in the land to punish the former, and the Hindus sided with him and attacked the Governor of the Punjab for his sympathetic reply to the Muslim deputation. This can hardly conduce to communal unity, and Hindu leaders should even now condemn Rajpal's crime. The paper publishes an article by Hamid-Ullah Afsar in which he urges Muslims to offer congregational prayers on the tenth of Muharram asking for the reconsideration of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement, the amendment of section 153A, and the passing of an ordinance until the amendment takes effect, and the release of the editor and the publisher of the Muslim Outlook. The paper deplores the opposition to the Muslim demand for an ordinance to penalize attacks on religious heads, and points out that as the ordinary processes are too slow something must be done to put an immediate stop to such attacks which are exacerbating Muslim feeling. The Najat condemns the action of the Punjab High Court in penalizing the Muslim Outlook for its truthful comment that the judgement of Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh was unfair, and says that it would not have so boldly supported the Sangathanists if the Muslims had not been on their last legs. When Islam was in its prime no one would have dared to attach more importance to the prestige of a judge than to that of the Prophet. Whatever the Punjab High Court has done has been for the love of the Sangathanists and it has insulted the law. So we declare that it is the most unjust and oppressive judgement among the unjust and oppressive judgements that have ever been delivered in India. If it arrests the editor of the Muslim Outlook for this offence then all those Indian Muslims who do not regard this crime as a virtue are heretics. However, we await Sir Malcolm Hailey's action, and if it is not favourable we would advise Muslims to stand up for their own defence. The Haqiqat deplores the outcry raised by the Hindu Press in the Punjab over Sir Malcolm Hailey's action in receiving a Muslim deputation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case, and says that every lover of peace should support the demand for suppressing inflammatory religious attacks. The Mashriq says that the action of the Punjab High Court against the Muslim Outlook has undone all the good work of Sir Malcolm Hailey, and Muslim feeling is now much more exacerbated than before. The Rahnuma says that no Muslim, to whatsoever sect he may belong, can tolerate an insult to his Prophet, and every Muslim will regard it as the means of his salvation to sacrifice his life for the sake of the honour of his Prophet and urges Government to legislate early with a view to stop foul attacks on religious heads. One Muhammad Mohsin, writing in the Imam, says that by acquitting Rajpal the Punjab High Court has cast an ugly blot on justice and has grievously pained Muslims. The writer of the Rangila Rasul is more dangerous than the murderer of Swami Shraddhanand, as while the latter killed the leader of a particular sect in India the former used such offensive language in regard to the Prophet of forty crores of Muslims all the world over that they regard it as even worse than the massacre of their community. Muslims attach greater value to the honour and prestige of their Prophet than to their own lives, property, and children. The acquittal of the author of the Rangila Rasul has, as anticipated, led to the publication of a filthy attack on the Prophet in the Vartman also, and but for immediate action in the matter would have led to a very serious situation as Muslims set little value by their lives when the honour of their Prophet is at stake. The Haq says that the law is certainly grossly defective if it is helpless to stop the publication of such offensive books as the Rangila Rasul. The interests of public peace are not promoted by lacerating the feelings of a large section of population. The Surmai Rozgar characterizes as Nadir Shahi the judgement of the Full Bench of the Punjab High Court convicting the editor and publisher of the Muslim Outlook and urges Muslims to close up their ranks in view of the repeated attacks that are being made on them. The Sadaqat regrets that the Punjab High Court judgement in the Rangila Rasul case is encouraging vile attacks on the Prophet as is shown by the cases of the Risala Vartman and the Pratap, and urges Government to legislate early with a view to stop such mischievous propaganda and also to adopt a more sympathetic attitude towards Muslims. Al Adl is indignant at the action taken against the Muslim Outlook, and assures it of the fullest sympathy and support of the Muslim community. Something should be done to mend the law if it is powerless to stop such scandalous vilification of the Prophet. The Sach congratulates the editor of the Outlook on his imprisonment in his righteous and courageous attempt to defend the honour of the Prophet and says that Muslims should not waste their time in making fine distinctions between the Judge and the law. While admitting that the Rangila Rasul judgement has seriously stirred public feeling the Aina advises Muslims to exercise patience and remain within constitutional limits trusting to Government to redress their grievances.

Reforms.

The question of the personnel of the forthcoming Statutory Commission is receiving growing attention in the Press. While moderate papers plead for the appointment of an adequate number of Indian members the more extremist papers urge a complete boycott of the Commission by Indians. The Aj says that if Indian leaders were to declare that they did not want the Statutory Commission and were to devote themselves to work among the people the Commission would at once be appointed and its personnel would be made as satisfactory as possible. But this is not to be. Terrible sufferings of subjection are still in store for us, and that is why we do not rely on our own exertions, but look to an outside power for help. The paper does not at all approve of the names so far suggested for the presidentship of the forthcoming Commission. In a subsequent article the paper says that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru should have insisted on the majority of the members of the Commission being Indian public men as a condition precedent to its acceptance by Indians. It strongly condemns the suggestion of the Englishman's correspondent that a board of assessors should be constituted before the appointment of the Commission. If a round-table conference of Indian and British representatives frames the scheme of reforms, or if Britain, after announcing her firm determination to grant Swaraj to India, sends a Commission here to consult Indians regarding its form, then alone can she be successful in solving this problem. The first alternative is a better one and also represents the national demand as made by the members of all the political parties in the Legislative Assembly more than once. Al Khalil says that if the Reforms Commission consists entirely of Europeans it will be boycotted by Indians as it will be of no use for them. Not less than half of its members should be Indians enjoying public confidence, and the Congress should, after consulting all parties, place a constitution before it.

Political propaganda.

The Aj writes :—Since the War imperialism or bullyism has become the most marked feature of the allies who, laying aside all dictates of civilization, etiquette and international practice, thoroughly plundered and maimed the Powers which laid down arms placing faith in the sense of generosity of President Wilson. The world would have fared worse at the hands of the imperialists but for various complications among the European Powers themselves. Still Asia has to contend with serious difficulties in view of the establishment of the League of Nations, whose sole aim is to impose white domination over the coloured peoples. She cannot extricate herself from the clutches of this league of imperialists unless and until a league of Asiatic nations is formed and it seriously sets about to oppose white domination. Brute force has taken the place of justice and morality in non-white countries as a result of the kindness of the League of Nations. The policy of the present imperialistic British Government towards China and Egypt discloses the latest phase of the British foreign policy of intimidating weak and non-white nations into friendship with Britain. It has become a part and parcel of the policy of imperialists to make friends of weak nations by demonstration of force and to offer provocation to others to incite them to take up arms as has been done in the case of Russia. In another issue the paper condemns as iniquitous the policy of Britain in respect of the employment of Indian forces in all parts of the world to enlarge the bounds of the British Empire and urges the Indian National Congress to expose this phase of the British policy in foreign countries. Referring to the Indian Navy Act the paper says that while India will have to furnish money for this navy it will be employed for imperial purposes. This navy would, in reality, belong to the Singapore naval base which would try to perpetuate the subjection of Eastern countries. This base will not herald the advent of Indian Swaraj, but proclaims that if imperialists continue to hold sway in Britain they will not only perpetuate the subjection of India but will also utilize her resources to extend British domination in other Eastern countries. Commenting on the celebration of Maharana Pratap's anniversary in the country on June 2 the Abhaya writes: We have no right to celebrate the anniversaries of heroes so long as we do not wipe out the atrocities committed on our country by foreigners and people belonging to other religions. At present the Hindu community is being attacked from all sides. Followers of other religions are determined to destroy Hinduism by various methods of the meanest kind. Our wives and daughters are being dishonoured by Muslim hooligans, our greatest leader is being made the target of bullets and a number of leaders are being threatened with murder, yet we who put to shame the name and the race of the Maharana are sitting quietly looking to the white Government. We ought to wake up even now and realise that we are the descendants of the same brave nation which has produced resolute and patriotic protectors of Hindu religion like Maharana Pratap. It is the duty of the Hindus to take lesson from the Maharana's exemplary life and firmly to resolve that following his motto of life, which was to destroy the unjust and the wicked, to liberate the country and to sacrifice one's life in protecting the honour of the fair sex, they will also sacrifice their lives. It is the duty of the Maharana's true followers to sacrifice themselves at the altar of the Motherland. In another issue the paper writes: The anniversary of Shivaji, the hero, was celebrated at various places during the last week. In our opinion our duty does not end merely with the holding of meetings. We should take a lesson from Shivaji, the apostle of freedom, and every Hindu should be inspired with the feeling that like Shivaji he, too, will not rest content without wiping out injustice and oppression. If the Hindus want to celebrate Shivaji's anniversary in its true sense they ought to create a revolution among the Hindus for the protection of Hindu religion, so that like Shivaji they may be able to destroy the government which is based on injustice and to lay the foundation of an Indian government in India. The day when the brave Hindus begin to follow in the footsteps of Shivaji their country will become happy and the enemies of their religion will come to their senses.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Sudharak reproduces extracts from Mr. Gandhi's article entitled "Hindu-Muslim Unity," published in the Nava Jiwan of June 16, 1927, and, exhorting the Hindus and Muslims to unite, says: In order to extricate ourselves from the steel claws of foreigners and to take our stand among the free people of the world it is imperative for us to sink our differences. It is, indeed, quite true that if we cannot peacefully establish unity among us we should give vent to our pent-up feeling at least for once and then sincerely unite together, otherwise as soon as our internecine quarrels weaken us the diabolical forces of the world which are lying in wait to swallow us will pounce upon us and compel us to writhe in agony in the hell of subjection. The Arya Mittra takes the Muslim Outlook severely to task for holding the Arya Samajists responsible for all the mischief that is being wrought in the country at present and advising the Government to proscribe the Satyartha Prakash and says: Outlook, just think whether the Satyartha Prakash which has made the world an abode of peace and happiness deserves to be proscribed, or that book which is causing unrest in the world by inculcating murder and violence, the intolerance bred by which is well known all over the world and under the influence of whose teachings blood-thirsty persons are thinking of attaining heaven by murdering great personages.

Indian States.

The Aj says that the Kathiawar States showed great courage in refusing to hand over their ports to the Government of India, but apprehends that they may have to rue grievously for their decision. It wonders why the Government of India did not ask France to hand over the administration of Pondicherry when the merchants of British India complained about gold threads being cheaply imported through that port. Is it because France differs from Indian States? The treatment accorded to Nabha, Indore, and Hyderabad is an obvious example of such a difference. The British angle of vision appears to have become changed in regard to Indian States since Lord Reading's régime. This will produce bitter results in course of time so far as the Indian chiefs are concerned. Those who are not prepared to bear the 'insult' of democracy must be prepared for meeting such respect from foreigners. In the course of an article, strongly denouncing the Government's attitude towards Indian States, the Vartman writes: If the crafty statesmen wound the feelings of Indian chiefs through tyranny, hypocrisy, and diplomacy they are big fools, and their folly will prove suicidal. Their present attitude clearly shows that they will involve the British Government in ruin. If British statesmen do not mend their ways British Government will speedily be wiped out of the earth's surface. The Surmai Rozgar publishes a communication complaining of maladministration, dacoities and murders, etc., in the Chhattrapur State and the consequent migration of its subjects to Nowgong and threatening further ugly disclosures if reform is not effected. The Haqiqat is sure that the story of the poisoning of the heir-apparent of Tonk has been concocted by interested persons, and hopes that the Government of India will do nothing to embarrass the popular Nawab of Tonk.

Nagpur Satyagraha.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: The object of the Nagpur Satyagraha must appeal to every Indian patriot. The movement depended not on the money of the wealthy, not on the enthusiasm of the leaders, but on the self-consciousness of the people. It will, we have no doubt, be revived after a month, and with greater success than now. If Gandhi will take the lead and show to us what can be made of such excellent material as Maharashtra has been discovered to possess he will have done something to wipe out the Himalayan blunder of Bardoli. The Abhaya condemns the conviction of Avari as unjust and attributes it to the desire of the trying magistrate to please the "bureaucracy" and says: The policy of the bureaucracy has always been to crush the country by every means, fair or foul, and to inflict the severest punishment on everyone who aspires after freedom so that he may be rendered incapable of raising his head again. But we appeal to the Indian public that they should dauntlessly come forward to take part in the struggle for freedom in order to emancipate the country from the oppression of the foreigners. They should consider the Nagpur Satyagraha as a holy agitation for winning freedom and should therefore help it in every way.

Muslim affairs.

Referring to recent reports about the despatch of Moplah families to the Andamans the Hamdan says that the Government should not take advantage of the condition of Moplah prisoners who would naturally prefer the partial freedom of the Andamans, but should deal justly and generously with them and not colonize them in a place considered unfit for habitation even by capital offenders. The Medina thanks the United Provinces Government for having decided to take some Muslims in the Provincial service even though there was not a single Muslim among the nine candidates who passed in the Indian Civil Service competitive examination held at Allahabad in January last, and whom it is now proposed to take in the Provincial service. The paper contends that it is extremely difficult for Muslim candidates to secure the required educational qualifications as insurmountable difficulties are thrown in their way by Hindus. It adds:—It was the first principle of Malaviya's movement for Ram Raj to throw all sorts of difficulties in the way of Muslim education and to reduce to the minimum Muslim representation in Government service. In pursuance of these objects several schemes have been at work to make Muslims weak and helpless.

Maharaja of Nabha.

Under the heading "Abduction of Nabha's Heir-Apparent" the Indian Daily Telegraph publishes a letter by Sirdar Sardul Singh Caveeshar, in which he complains of relentless and systematic attacks having been launched against the sanctity of the Maharaja's home life and says that now "underground plots are being hatched in Nabha and Patiala to abduct Tikka Saheb and further poison and ruin the home life of the persecuted ruler of Nabha." In a leading article, headed "A Challenge to the Sikhs," on this letter the paper writes: The removal of the Tikka Saheb is not a domestic problem affecting the father and mother; it is not even a political problem affecting the relations between Nabha and Patiala. It is a religious question directly affecting the entire Sikh nation. Will the Sikhs take up the challenge?

The Rangoon University.

Referring to Sir Harcourt Butler's appeal for Rs. 50 lakhs for the Rangoon University the Pratap writes: The gubernatorial mandate has been issued and the subscription is being raised. But how? Tahsildars, naib-tahsildars, deputy collectors, and other officials send for the villagers and say that those who own one bullock should pay Rs. 5 and those who possess one acre of land should pay Rs. 10. The poor indigent cultivators pray for being excused, but they are not heard and are intimidated. The zamindars are also threatened with prosecution in default of payment. For raising this sum the authorities have begun to hold shows all over Burma in which dances of prostitutes and gambling go on briskly. The number of gambling dens is so large that the life of the people is in danger. All these sins are being committed through the kindness of the Nawab of Burma for building a temple of the goddess of learning. Fie on this heartless barbarism!

Hindu law.

The Aj says that no satisfactory arrangement has so far been made for the training of judges and vakils in the Hindu law, and urges that this deficiency should be soon made good. It agrees with the opinion of Dr. Ganga Nath Jha that Mimansa should form a part of the course of the LL.B. examination. It also urges that the Hindu law, as embodied in case law, and in original Sanskrit works, should be codified.

The Rangila Rasul case.

The Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases continue to be the main subject for heated discussion on communal lines. The Aligarh Mail contends that section 153(A), Indian Penal Code, was entirely applicable in the case of the Rangila Rasul and writes :-"We do not desire to attribute any motives to Mr. Justice Dalip Singh in passing his judgement which has gained so much notoriety in public. But we do maintain that, junior as His Lordship is on the Bench of the Lahore High Court, he has shown an inferior sort of legal understanding in not applying section 153(A), Indian Penal Code, to a case to which the section is specially applicable." The paper is, however, at a loss to understand the "folly" of the Khilafat Committee of Lahore in starting civil disobedience "and thereby most inopportunely prejudicing Government against Muslims at a time when its sense of justice should be made all the keener by our restrained attitude in removing our grievances in the matter of Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh's judgement." The Aj says that although Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh's interpretation of the law affects all communities alike, it is surprising that the Muslims in the Punjab should have got so excited as to have transgressed the bounds of etiquette and civilization in their agitation over it. The way in which ignorant masses are being incited to violence in public meetings makes one doubt whether authority exists in the Punjab or not. A section of Muslims has made a mountain of a mole-hill in order to spread fanaticism in the country. Condemning the Muslim agitation against the judgement of Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh, the Pratap writes:—Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement is a double-edged sword. On the strength of this judgement Muslim preachers can, with impunity, use the filthiest language against the Hindu incarnations. We are very sorry to find that the Hindu Sabha has passed a resolution in support of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh. Kunwar Dalip Singh's action is surely praiseworthy, not because he has let off a Hindu but because he has fearlessly interpreted the law and acted accordingly. His judgement applies equally to Hindus and Muslims. The Arya Mitra bitterly complains that while the Government frequently applies section 144 against Arya Samajist preachers it is not taking any action against the violent and fanatical Mullas and others who are raising a storm over the Rangila Rasul case and showering fire on Hindus. Commenting on the reply of the Governor of the Punjab to the Muslim deputation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case the Shakti remarks:—The reply of the Governor is not only calculated to damage the prestige of the Government, but it also constitutes as great an insult to the Punjab High Court as the offensive article in the Muslim Outlook. We do not know whether or not the High Court will institute proceedings against the Governor as well or whether it lies within its jurisdiction or not to do so. It is regrettable that the Punjab Muslims have lost their balance of mind over this matter and that they are leading a crusade against the Hindus. They cannot tolerate the imprisonment of even one or two of their co-religionists and regard it as extremely tyrannical, little knowing that the whole country is a prison and that we are all slaves. Referring to the agitation caused among Muslims by the judgements of the Punjab High Court in the Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases the Medina writes:—The day is near when every strip of India will become more uneasy than was the case during the Khilafat agitation and every Muslim who hears of the release of the reviler of the Prophet will come forward to engage in combat with the Government. In Delhi itself a lac of Muslims have made a demonstration of their wounded feelings. But we see that the Government neither issues any communiqué nor proposes any remedy. Will the Government of Lord Irwin come to its senses when the situation has passed beyond control and the seven heavens have resounded with demonstrations of the seven crores of Indian Muslims? Such a day will surely be critical for the Government of India. Commenting on the civil disobedience campaign in Lahore in connexion with the Muslim Outlook case, the same paper writes:—The forces of tyranny and oppression do not allow the Muslims of Lahore to confine themselves to peaceful efforts. Infidelity has always been at war with Islam. This, however, serves to rejuvenate the latter. The gauntlet has been thrown and it has been taken up by the proud fighters. Unarmed Muslim volunteers have been left to the tender mercies of the unjustified violence of armed and mounted police. The atmosphere of Lahore is resounding with the blows of batons and the sound of the trampling of unarmed, non-violent and wounded fighters under the hoofs of horses. But, God willing, Muslims will not waver. The Lahore authorities have given proof of absolute want of statesmanship and the citadel of the prestige of the British Government is shaking before the legitimate fight for truth and justice. Muslims are prepared to undergo a thousand times greater sufferings for the protection of the honour of their Prophet than what the British Empire can do for upholding the prestige of Britain. In yet another article the same paper says:—When the Sikhs made a stand at Guru ka Bagh, Muslim constables were selected to thrash them. To-day they (the Sikhs) have been compensated for this. The Sikh police has been allowed to satisfy its heart's desire (for revenge). Such is the administrative policy of the British Government. Indians should take warning from this. To-day if the white-skinned western god is utilizing the Sikhs to mete out cruel treatment to their compatriots, to-morrow these very sticks will be placed in the hands of Hindus or Muslims to avenge themselves for the past incident. Would that our countrymen were to open their eyes and ponder. The Najat says that the Hindu Mahasabha has only made a display of its short-sightedness, cowardice and meanness in reproaching Sir Malcolm Hailey for receiving a Muslim deputation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case. It is a debatable point whether the Muslims have been emboldened by His Excellency's reply. As a matter of fact Muslims regard their conscience alone as a guide and take their cue not from any earthly governor but from God alone. With Muslims love of their religion is all-absorbing and it is a mistake to think that they will be influenced by mundane considerations in matters spiritual. They will go on agitating until the prestige of the Prophet is restored. The Oudh Akhbar says that by refusing an audience to the proposed deputation of the Ahmadiya community, His Excellency Sir Malcolm Hailey has shown that he is not going to strengthen the forces of disorder by repeating his initial mistake. His mere declaration that Government was considering how to meet the situation created by Mr. Justice Dalip Singh precipitated a campaign of calumny against that judge and Sir Shadi Lal which has now transgressed all bounds of decency and if this new Ahmadiya deputation had been received the peace of Punjab cities would have been seriously threatened. His Excellency's condemnation of the improper attacks on High Court Judges will also have a salutary effect. Every right-minded person sympathizes with Muslims in the present crisis, but they must restrain their foul-mouthed publicists. The Desh Bhagat characterizes the Muslim agitation in the Punjab about the Rangila Rasul affair as a hollow one engineered by Mr. Zafar Ali Khan only after action was taken against the Muslim Outlook and says:—Punjabi Muslims have ignored the laws of Shariat any number of times and they are excited to-day simply because they have been egged on by certain leaders. Muslims of all free countries despise Indian Muslims because the latter quarrel needlessly with the Hindus and never hesitate to help the English who are the true enemies of Islam. They always advise Indian Muslims to strive with Hindus for this country's freedom and not to aid the British in subjugating other Islamic countries.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap publishes an article by "A student of politics" who argues that the British Empire is gradually declining and says:—The more I study the history of British colonies the more confirmed becomes my belief that what twenty years ago the British used to term as the British Empire has already been destroyed. There are some blind men who betray the shallowness of their knowledge of history by occasional references to the greatness of the British Empire, but I think there is neither any British Empire anywhere nor its greatness. It is a delusion which may be shattered any day by the powerful kick of time. It is my firm belief, which is being strengthened by the course of events, that in the next twenty years even the shadow of the British Empire will cease to exist. The wheel of the dismemberment of the Empire is revolving, slowly no doubt but steadily. In these circumstances those who want Swaraj within the British Empire should act after mature deliberation lest they should have to exclaim that the Empire under which they were striving to remain had disappeared. Referring to a message for preventing "the terrible war of the future" issued by the American peasants to labour all the world over, the Desh Bhagat says that Indians could not have forgotten their sufferings during the last war and as hostilities are bound to take place in India herself in the next war their miseries would be simply indescribable. We all know by what heartless and disgraceful means the Government of India took money from India in the name of loan during the last war and how hundreds of unwilling men were forced in spite of their lamentations and bewailings to proceed to the front to shed blood. It is also a settled fact that the British capitalistic Government will join this coming war not in the interests of India but in its own interests as the interests of India and England always conflict. In fact all these wars are for keeping India under subjection, as it is only through her subjection that England can continue to survive. It is therefore the duty of all Indians to ponder carefully over this sympathetic message of American peasants and to determine how they can aid in preserving the peace of the world. If Indians were to withhold their co-operation to-day, British officials and soldiers would be unable to carry on the administration. If Indians had not helped Britain during the last war she would have been wiped out of existence and she would not have survived to reward Indians in the Jallianwala Bagh by raining bullets on unarmed persons. We believe that if we choose we can respond to this message of American peasants and can establish societies for preserving world peace which would go to villages and cities and impress upon peasants, workers, raises and zamindars that it would be a terrible sin to endanger world peace by helping Britain with men and money in the next war and would be like laying the axe at one's own foot. We believe that this propaganda can considerably change the atmosphere and there would surely be a great decrease in the enlistment of our young men in the army who risk their necks for the sake of ten or twenty rupees, if they are warned of all the sufferings that they would have to undergo after enlistment. In the same way propaganda can be carried on regarding help with money. Commenting on the recent orders of the Iraq Government against the employment of Indians the same paper says that though Indians planted the British flag in Iraq they are being excluded from that country now that their services are no longer needed. This should open the eyes of those Indians who are ever ready to enslave their neighbours and they should in future refuse to sacrifice their lives for the sake of mere money and should decide not to become tools of British statesmen.

Reforms.

The Vartman takes Congress leaders severely to task for the interest they are showing in the forthcoming Royal Commission which it characterizes as a mirage and says :—The very idea of bowing the knee before the Commission is repulsive to us. We realize our humiliation and pity this evil propensity of our leaders. Have we fallen so low that we are not ashamed to kneel to our rulers, those very rulers who shot thousands of our innocent brethren in the Jallianwala Bagh massacre, who during the martial law days made a number of persons crawl on their bellies and who are even to-day making hundreds of innocent young men rot in jails? We think that the most telling evidence before the Commission will be to boycott it and thus to show to it and to the civilized world that the appointment of the Commission is a fraud. But in spite of having been deceived repeatedly we continue to believe in the justice of Government. We have not yet realized that liberty cannot be won without sacrifice. The Desh Bhagat asserts that the Royal Commission is a device to kill all remaining political life in the country by deluding Indians with a few petty concessions and urges the Congress to push forward its constructive programme and boycott the Commission. The Rahnuma says that if the Statutory Commission does not contain an adequate number of trusted Indians, Indians are sure to refuse the second instalment of reforms. The Oudh Akhbar wonders why no Indian name is being suggested for the presidentship of the Statutory Commission, specially when Mr. Patel and any number of capable Indians are available for the office.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Commenting on the Muslim agitation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case and the demand at Allahabad, Bareilly and other places for the stoppage of marriage processions during the Moharram, the Sainik writes:—These incidents clearly show that the religious madness of Muslims has exceeded all bounds. If some effective remedy is not applied very soon the matter will become very serious. These incidents themselves point to the specific medicine. The fate of the Satyagraha at Lahore and of the Muslim intransigency at Allahabad and Bareilly shows that Muslim madness disappears as soon as the authorities apply the remedy. If the Government wishes it can remove the madness in an instant. In the course of an article headed "A Perilous Mistake", the Vartman writes:—The Government has realized that if the Hindu-Muslim disturbances continue for some time then its own prestige will receive a severe blow. It was after some time that the Government felt that if these disturbances continued unchecked the steel claw which had so far succeeded in governing India would become useless and the bureaucratic frame itself would be jeopardized. The attitude of the Government is, therefore, now changing. It is somewhat repenting that it did not do well in having fostered this new disease. This is why it is now acting cautiously. But some officers, following crooked policy, have stimulated the Hindu-Muslim tension and thereby rendered the position so bad that the plague cannot be removed by ordinary means. The paper reproduces from the Arjun (Delhi) a manifesto purporting to have been issued by Maulana Mahomed Ali, Khwaja Hasan Nizami, Mufti Kifayat Ullah and others exhorting Muslims to kill those (Englishmen, Hindus, Christians, Jews and Whites) who defame the Prophet Muhammad; to dishonour their boys, girls and women; to destroy temples and churches; to commit arson and devastation; perform cow-sacrifices briskly; cut top-knots and sacred threads; to shed rivers of blood and to destroy the empire of Victoria, Edward, propagate Islam and spread Islamic rule.

Earl Winterton's speech.

The Leader writes:—Earl Winterton's review of Indian affairs in the House of Commons was a very perfunctory, shallow and poor performance. There was not a word of sympathy for Indian aspirations, nothing which indicated a statesmanlike grasp of Indian problems. His speech showed that under the present dispensation India can expect hardly anything from Britain except periodic advice and admonitions as to how to behave. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Earl Winterton made a sorry attempt to be impertinent and to flaunt the British greatness of character and possession of driving force and of the willingness of his great nation to show us sympathy and good-will if they are genuinely wanted by India. His impertinence was but a poor attempt, a laboured emulation of his illustrious chief. More than British good-will and sympathy we want to be extricated from the strangle hold of the British hand on us and Earl Winterton in his speech has said enough to cause the misgiving that, along with the Commission, the Lees are busy with fresh provisions of luxury for the British youth who seek service here. The Aj says that it is nothing but deliberate misrepresentation on the part of Lord Winterton to allege that Mr. Saklatwala's views did not represent those of even one man out of a hundred Indians. Members of Parliament who know nothing about India may well give credence to his lordship's allegation, but it cannot but provoke ridicule in this country. Is there one Indian out of a thousand thinking Indians who supports the existing system of administration? India is not so much afraid of Bolshevism as of the ever-increasing influence of British imperialists. Whether Indians are happy and prosperous or otherwise under the British rule cannot be ascertained by those rulers who care more for their pay than anything else. It is only the wearer who knows where the shoe pinches. Indeed, India is now more impoverished and more diseased than she was ever before. The very fact that Indian authorities refuse to make an inquiry into the economic condition of the people shows that Indians are worse off than ever before. Lord Winterton and his predecessors have been getting members of Parliament to support their administration simply by misrepresenting facts to them, but it is to be hoped that this game of throwing dust into the eyes of the British public will not last long.

Music before mosques.

Discussing the genesis of the controversy regarding music before mosques, the Desh Bhagat says:—Thanks to Lord Reading, Hindus and Muslims always hate each other. In pre-British times Hindu and Muslim citizens were never so thirsty for each other's blood. It was through the kindness of British statesmen that inter-communal discord was produced. Muslims were incited to insist on cow-sacrifice on Bakr-Id as an important religious duty, while Hindus were egged on to sacrifice their lives for their mother cow. This sowed the seeds of discord, but still relations were on the whole cordial and the unity of the non-cooperation days startled Englishmen and Lord Reading after great deliberation introduced the question of music before mosques to effect a permanent cleavage between the two communities. There were mosques in pre-British days and no Muslim can deny that Hindus were freely allowed to pass playing music before them. But the situation was entirely changed by the jugglery of Lord Reading and Muslims began to insist on music being stopped before mosques as it interfered with their prayers. Now that English statesmen have realized that they have ensured eternal discord by this move, they want to gain some control over the warring elements. So the Government of India has adopted the double-faced policy of supporting the Muslims in this matter in some places and the Hindus in other places. Both should therefore realize that Government really sympathises with neither, but is the enemy of both and wants to keep them in its subjection by setting them by the ears. Hindus and Muslims should, therefore, free themselves from the snares of false leaders who are really Government spies and make them quarrel with each other and should come to a compromise on the music question in every locality. Muslims lose nothing if music is played before mosques and Hindus lose nothing if they refrain from music before mosques.

Maharaja of Nabha.

The Indian Daily Telegraph which has been trying in almost every issue to hold up the case of the Maharaja of Nabha as a "national wrong," publishes a statement by the Maharaja on the "Nabha day" in which he complains of his most unjust and cruel banishment and of plots being hatched to get him assassinated. Commenting on this statement, the paper writes:—Hindus have read and wept over the lot of Raja Harishchandra and Nala. In Nabha we have a similar instance of a good ruler being exposed to the most intense sufferings, the constant dread of assassination haunting him like a shadow. To the authorities who wonder why the Nabha wrong should exercise such deep public interest, we commend this statement of His Highness. No Indian can read it without a gasp of pain. Referring to the report of the Riasat that the payment of the allowance of the Maharaja of Nabha has been withheld, the Shankar writes:—God knows what sort of jest this is on the part of the Government. After all what object has it in view in making payment after subjecting the Maharaja to harassment in this way? Government may well be pleased at such dealings, but surely it degrades itself in the eyes of the public. Commenting on the same subject, the Desh Bhagat says that Government respects treaties only so long as it is forced to do so and that the laws of humanity and justice have no place in the British vocabulary. It is a pity that such mistakes and high-handed acts of the Political department lead the public to think that a Government which does not respect its treaties with Ruling Chiefs is not to be trusted and that Englishmen are liars and cheats and turn round when their object is served. If British statesmen want to retrieve their reputation for justice they should abstain from such pettinesses and should take severe notice of those officials who act in violation of treaties. It is better if Government pays up the arrears of allowance before its prestige is further damaged by discussions in the press and legislature.

The Jhansi Municipal Board.

The Aj congratulates the Jhansi municipal board on the courage displayed by it in challenging the Government either to expunge the disparaging remarks made against it in the annual report or to substantiate them. Paid officials of the Civil Service, says the paper, have no moral right to criticize the actions of the representatives of the people done for public good. Those who in utter disregard of the poverty of the country can get their salaries and allowances increased through the certification powers of the Viceroy have no right to disparage, from easy arm-chairs, the work of the representatives of the people. Elected members do commit blunders, but it is baseless to urge that divisional commissioners have a better sense of public good than the elected members. Debts saddled on municipal boards during their administration by collectors and commissioners furnish a striking example of their administrative efficiency and their sense of public good. It is the fruit of the administration of these officials that the water works constructed through loans collapsed even before those loans had been cleared off. Every patriot will find it hard to put up with the criticism of the work of elected members by these superfluous and irresponsible commissioners. We are pained to find that although local self-government is a transferred subject the Minister serves as a mouth-piece of commissioners and other officials, over whom he has no control, and censures popular representatives.

Control over district boards' roads.

The Haqiqat says that the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Yusuf's proposal for Government control over district boards' roads was inspired by the best of motives and was only meant to improve the admittedly miserable condition of these roads and not to usurp the powers of district boards. Mr. Chintamani and his liberal friends, however, who find the Hon'ble Nawab Sahib's personality in the ministry too strong and regard it as a stumbling block in the achievement of their personal ends, raised a regular storm in opposition to it. The Hon'ble Nawab Sahib's opponents were not trying to promote the public interest but to create feeling against the ministry according to their settled policy ever since they have entered the Council.

Communal representation.

The Aj does not approve of Hakim Ajmal Khan's suggestion to reduce property qualification with a view to enlarge Muslim electorates as this would involve injustice to the Hindu voter as an individual and urges that in order to achieve the same end the property qualification should be replaced by the literary qualification under which all literate people should be eligible to vote.

The Agricultural Commission.

The Desh Bhagat points out that recent evidence before the Agricultural Commission in London clearly shows that the Commission was constituted not for the benefit of the Indian agriculturist but with a view to provide cheaper raw material for British industry.

The Kakori case.

Commenting on the punishments awarded in the supplementary Kakori dacoity case the Haqiqat says that even though according to the finding of the court the offences were serious, yet the infliction of such severe sentences as smack of vindictiveness could hardly be conceived. The policy of repression and frightfulness has always proved to be disastrous for tyrannical governments. The terrible sentences can be productive of nothing but hatred against the British.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina publishes a contributed article by M. Abdul Majid Qureshi, editor of the Tanzim, in which the writer suggests that every mosque of a mohalla should be made the centre of all activities for the reform and organization of the Muslim community.

The Rangila Rasul case.

THE Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases continue to be the main topic of the Muslim Press. Referring to the Punjab Khilafat Committee's demands, including the immediate cashiering of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh and the appointment of a commission of inquiry to investigate all matters relating to the High Court, the Leader writes:—A more outrageous and absurd demand it is difficult to conceive. There was a time when the Khilafat Committee preached the boycott of law courts. Now it wants to dictate who should and who should not be the judges of the High Court. The Committee has also demanded the immediate release of volunteers and workers arrested for protesting against the High Court judgement and executive orders. These demands cannot be complied with without an abject surrender on the part of Government to communal extremism, and there is not the ghost of a chance that a strong Governor like Sir Malcolm Hailey would yield to them. The mischievous communal game of hurling defiance both at Government and the Hindus, and of sowing the seeds of anarchy and communal hatred among the inflammable masses ought to be demonstrated to be non-paying. The Aligarh Mail commends the decision of the Khilafat Committee to postpone civil disobedience and writes:—We believe Government has taken full notice of our protests and is anxious to remove our just complaint. For our part, we Muslims should henceforth be restrained over the whole problem. We put forward this plea for restraint because of Sir Malcolm Hailey's sympathetic attitude towards the Muslim community in regard to the preservation of the honour of our Holy Prophet. His Excellency has declared that the Risala Vartman case is a test case. We should literally wait and see the Lahore High Court deliver its judgement in this case. Referring to the Muslim agitation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case the Surya writes:—Government should not hesitate to enforce the existing law against those who delivered venomous speeches in the Badshahi Mosque and violated section 144. If it cannot do so, it should at least leave the Punjab bag and baggage and allow Muslim raj to be established there. The Medina invites the attention of the Government to the fire of discontent raging amidst the Muslim population of India as a result of the Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases and warns it of the danger to peace and order if it does not act with the utmost tact and foresight. The paper also calls attention to the Bolshevik menace and emphasizes the need for Government of securing the good-will of Muslims for averting the danger. It goes on to say:—For the first time during the period of their slavery Muslims are faced with the question whether their religion is safe in India or not, and their future policy will depend on the answer to this question. In the present circumstances the Muslims are obliged to wait and see what administrative action the Government takes, but if the result of waiting proves disappointing it is feared that their feelings towards the Government will not remain pleasant. If the Government does not accept Muslim demands they should begin a formidable agitation which for its strength might be unique in the annals of India and might show that no sacrifice is too great for protecting the honour of the Prophet. The Sada-i-Muslim writes:—The dirty attacks of Rajpal on the Prophet have deeply stirred Muslim feelings, and it is a pity that Justice Dalip Singh has wrongly declared that an insult to the Prophet is not an insult to Islam. Indian Muslims have sacrificed their lives in the past for the honour of the Prophet, and there are still hundreds of Muslim lions alive who are willing to court imprisonment like the editor and publisher of the Muslim Outlook. These lions have been vexed, and those who have vexed them have not only been praised but also helped; hence if this lion is angered and rises it would not be strange. Then the empty threats of the Arya Samajists and the tricks of the existing law would be annihilated in a trice. Either this mischief and impertinence must stop, or Muslims should be allowed to repeat their history. Muslims may have been reduced to ashes, but there are embers lurking still among them. The gusts of wind should be controlled, otherwise if these embers are fanned into flame both the earth and the sky would be burnt to ashes. Remember that Muslims are prepared to sacrifice all for the honour of the Prophet, for without him there is no Islam. If the Prophet is reviled and Muslims are advised to enjoy such revilement then neither Islam nor Muslims will tolerate this. The Najat apprehends that the Muslim agitation is going to degenerate into a ridiculous farce owing to differences of opinion regarding the judgement of Kunwar Dalip Singh, and writes:—The extreme confusion of thought betrayed by Muslim publicists in discussing the subject must be provoking mirth among Hindus and Government, as while one party demands the resignation of the judge the other demands an amendment of the law itself. We do not lay claim to legal knowledge, but know this much that the law under discussion is not a new one and its object is known and acted upon. Before this judgement judges have convicted people for writing books of a similar nature under this very law. So, however fine the point may be that is raised by Kunwar Dalip Singh he cannot be exonerated from the crime of prejudice. This very effort of his to raise a fine point against the hitherto accepted and general view of the law which did not so far occur to any judge constitutes the worst form of prejudice. However valuable the example of legal finesse shown by Kunwar Dalip Singh may be it is not free from prejudice. We are grateful to Mr. Muhammad Ali's legal learning for showing up the flaws of the law, but we are not prepared to admit even for a moment that the judge is free from the charge of the worst bias. Mr. Muhammad Ali's research has exposed the defect of the law also, and we should now unitedly demand that the judge should resign his office and the law should be amended. There is no reason for discord in this matter, and Muslims should not benefit their enemies by raising false issues. Al Khalil approves of the decision of the Punjab Khilafat Committee to suspend civil disobedience, but urges the Government to concede the Muslim demand for an ordinance for protecting their Prophet from insulting and abusive attacks. The paper also asks for the immediate release of all Muslim "volunteers" arrested in Lahore for violating section 144 and for the withdrawal of cases against Syed Ataullah Shah and Khwaja Abdul Rahman Gazi with a view to relieve tension and excitement among Muslims. The Mashriq urges Muslims to cultivate patience as advised by Sir Malcolm Hailey in his reply to the request of the Ahmadiya deputation for an interview, and assures them that His Excellency is sure to redress the grievances of Muslims and to remove the difficulty caused by the new interpretation of the law. Kunwar Dalip Singh could never have anticipated the effect that would be produced on Muslims by his judgement and could not have realized that Muslims do not acknowledge their Prophet as a mere matter of form and are not like Christians prepared to tolerate open abuse of Christ by the Aryas. The Hindustani regards the Muslim agitation as a preparation for carrying on a jehad against Hindus and the Government,

The Muharram.

Referring to the Bareilly riot the Anand writes:—Poor Hindus have been grievously wronged. Music within closed doors was stopped; those who played it were arrested; and the Hindus themselves were beaten, but the police and the officials were unable to prevent this injustice. It is even reported that excuses were made for not recording the complaints of injured Hindus. We invite the attention of the Governor towards this matter. There is sorrow and discontent among the local Hindus. His Excellency should get an inquiry made into the riot through an impartial committee and vindicate justice by adequately punishing the guilty. If the reports of the wrongs done to Hindus are true then the local authorities, too, are not free from blame, and His Excellency should make an inquiry into their conduct also and punish them if found guilty with a view to restore the confidence of the Hindus in the Government's sense of justice. The Medina complains that although formerly marriages and other festive ceremonies were never celebrated during the Muharram, this year Hindus deliberately fixed the date of marriages during the ten days of the Muharram. This appears to be the result of some organized movement. No calamity would have befallen if the marriages had been postponed for a few days. We wonder how short-sighted those men are who merely for the sake of creating mischief hold their festive ceremonies during a mourning occasion like that of Muharram. As a result of the disturbances caused by this attitude several homes are resounding with mourning cries instead of marriage drums. The Haqiqat attributes the disturbances during the Muharram at Multan, Sholapur and Bareilly to the aggressive mentality developed among Hindus by the Sangathanist propaganda of Dr. Moonje and his friends, and regrets that the authorities at Multan could not take precautionary measures in spite of their bitter experiences in the past. The authorities at Bareilly acted with commendable promptitude and courage and thus averted serious bloodshed. The Hindustani attributes the Muharram riots to the high-handedness of the Muslims and, exhorting the Hindus to shake off their lethargy, says :—You should rely upon your own exertions and should never depend upon the Government for protection. This Government is quite faithless, and, in spite of the fact that the Hindus always help it in the hour of need and sacrifice their lives in large numbers for its sake as they did in the German War, it has never been of any use to them and even now pats the Muslims who abuse it. Describing the recent Muharram disturbances at Bareilly the Arya Patra says that it is widely rumoured in the city that the fact that both the city kotwal and the tahsildar were Muslims encouraged the Muslims. Preparations for the riot had been made beforehand, as Muslims were angry with the Arya Samaj as its Anathalaya band had played in various marriage processions allowed by the Magistrate. The Muslim goondas could not attack the marriage processions owing to the excellent arrangements of the district magistrate and vented their spleen on the Arya Samaj. The attitude of the police towards the wounded Hindus who went to lodge reports in the kotwali was very bad.

Political propaganda.

Referring to the Pioneer's proposals for strengthening the North-West Frontier in view of the rupture with Russia, the Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The best and most effective way to fight Bolshevism is to grant us Swaraj. A free and self-governing India is a stronger defence against foreign aggression than a discontented and disappointed people smarting under a sense of tyranny and oppression. We must, however, utter a word of warning that the rapidly accumulating sins of the Government against the political-minded are slowly bringing into being a class of people who honestly believe that any rule is better than British rule. The Sudharak exhorts the people to do their utmost to make the Patuakhali and Nagpur Satyagrahas successful, as they represent the initial stage of their preparations for the final struggle for the attainment of Swaraj through this most powerful and infallible weapon. Government is very much afraid of these Satyagrahas, and that is why it is wielding the discus of repression with full force to suppress them. It is, therefore, all the more imperative that people should come forward in their largest numbers to swell the ranks of Satyagrahas. If these Satyagrahas fail for want of volunteers no spirit will be left in the country to face the bureaucracy. The Vartman says that formerly India was an ideal country with regard to morality and absence of crimes, but now serious crimes are increasing at an alarming rate. For this the Government itself is mainly responsible as it is on account of the Government that our poverty is increasing day by day and poverty leads to crime. Under the headlines "Slavery is a horrible sin : If Satan fights against Englishmen I shall side with him" the same paper publishes a letter from "Raja" Mahendra Pratap from Berlin, in the course of which he writes :—I have now only Rs. 6 left with me, and for several days I have been getting only half meals. For many weeks I have been obliged to stint myself even in the matter of shaving and washing of clothes. Perhaps the Amir of Afghanistan may hear of my difficulties, or my own countrymen may send me something. To-day our interests are identical with those of Russia. If Russians fight against Englishmen we shall, in all circumstances, side with the former. I go so far as to say that in the present condition we shall even help Satan if he fights against Englishmen. We know that in the interests of humanity 33 crores of men must be rescued from slavery. As Englishmen alone stand in the way of our independence they should be rooted up to clear the way. The Krishna regrets that Mr. Gandhi has enunciated queer principles in his letter which has been responsible for ending the Nagpur satyagrah (Arms Act) movement. We favoured this satyagrah, even though we knew that it would not last, as we were opposed on principle to the Arms Act. In our opinion the cleverest artifice employed by the British Government to encompass the downfall of Indians has been the framing of the Arms Act. The peace on which the Government prided itself a few years back was the peace of unmanly people. The Arms Act has done more harm to Indians than the Rowlatt Act and the Jallianwala Bagh (tragedy). Swaraj cannot be attained by sweet talk about khaddar, charkha and Hindu-Muslim unity. It is necessary to give blood to get Swaraj. Whenever it is attained it will be attained through might. Those who believe that Swaraj can be gained through non-violence are no better than babes, however high-placed they may be, and are giving a wrong lead to the nation. It is true that India is just now altogether unfit to draw the sword, and on principle also India should not at present draw the sword as this will do her harm and not good. Just now India badly needs the friendship of Britain and this friendship should last for a long time. But if Britain does not do anything for the good of India, and does not fit her to take her stand among the free and living nations of the world then India will perforce have to fight an honest fight with Britain to regain her lost position and freedom. Mr. Gandhi's logic is queer, and either his satyagrah is a paradox or he favours the Arms Act and wants to strengthen the bureaucracy. It would be best if Mr. Gandhi were to keep such novel views to himself. He, however, is not to be restrained, and it is a matter for gratification that India has now become fully aware of the reality of his non-violent satyagrah.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Referring to Sirdar Iqbal Ali Shah's remark in his speech in the London mosque that Muslims felt that the wild talk of immediate Swaraj was a Hindu propaganda, and that a clear-cut English policy of alliance with Islam was the surest guarantee for peace the Aligarh Mail writes :—There is not a single Muslim in this country who does not stubbornly oppose the substitution of Hindu Raj for British Raj at which Malaviyas, Moonjes and Lajpat Rais are aiming. The British Empire is the greatest Muslim power in the sense that it contains the largest Muslim population. If the English and the Muslims are allied it means that a greater part of Asia and Africa will enjoy peace, tranquillity and prosperity owing to the absence of any Anglo-Muslim friction. If Great Britain avowedly becomes the ally of Islam and pursues a policy which may not lead to the least estrangement between the English and Muslims a greater part of world-peace can surely be assured. In the course of a lengthy review of British policy in regard to the "political enervation" of Hindus and Muslims in India the Desh Bhagat says that Government is trying to crush the political strength of Indians by rendering self-respecting and patriotic ruling chiefs helpless and by attacking the Hindus with the help of Muslims. It is thus idle for Hindus to look to Government for help in their sufferings. They should, therefore, bravely welcome this open declaration of war by Government and try to defend their lives, property, honour and rights. They should also win over Muslim nationalists and expose this cunning and disgraceful policy of the British. They should especially carry on propaganda in Britain, so that the masses there may press the ruling classes to abandon their anti-Hindu policy. The time has now come when every attack of Muslims should be answered, but in such a manner as to isolate the Muslim nationalists from the goondas who are traitors to the nation. If the Hindus want to survive they must immediately organize all their strength in conjunction with gentlemanly Muslims and try to overthrow the present Government. A strong military organization of self-defence should be set up everywhere to combat British and Muslim attacks. We would fain like India to be converted into another Ireland and would urge British statesmen to show more sense if they do not want their names to darken the pages of history and do not like to earn the opprobrium of their own progeny by endangering their empire in the East. The Hindustani regrets that Government has, during the last five years, lost its reputation for even-handed justice between Hindus and Muslims, and communal disturbances have, as a result, become the order of the day. The authorities cannot shirk their responsibility by alleging that the Hindus and Muslims have suddenly become quarrelsome during the last four years. What for are the civilians so highly praised if they cannot put a stop to riots? Why do they not hand over the administration to Indians so that these disturbances may come to an end? We repeat that temporary and make-shift measures and this looking on at bloody dramas will in the end prove a deadly poison for Government, and when the opportunity is gone it will be able to do nothing but wring its hands in despair.

Appointment of Finance Member.

Commending the appointment of Mr. G. B. Lambert as the next Finance Member of the United Provinces, the Pioneer writes:—Mr. Lambert has had ample opportunity of gaining a complete grip of all varieties of provincial problems. It is thirty years since he first arrived in India, and the whole of his career has been spent in the United Provinces. While acknowledging the ability of Mr. Lambert the Leader criticises his appointment as Finance Member on the ground of his "almost militant reactionaryism, a supercilious contempt for Indian opinion." Referring to this criticism the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We are asked to believe that a great calamity has happened to the political fortunes of the provinces for five years by the appointment of Mr. Lambert as the Finance Member. We suppose it forms part of the Liberal creed to bank all its faith in appointments, but the public watch with absolute unconcern the domestic concerns of the bureaucracy—the personnel of the Government—so long as the system continues as such. The province of Bihar and Orissa did not display any political miracle under an Indian Finance Member who was a Congressman and journalist. The baby outlook in politics that would stick its faith in power and pelf, we suppose, must needs find expression whenever a high appointment is made. "Politicus," writing in the editorial page of the Indian Daily Telegraph, says that Mr. Lambert's appointment as Finance Member will commend itself to the public, and adds:—Mr. Lambert has done very creditable service as Chief Secretary in these provinces, and no one after Mr. A. C. Chatterjee achieved such remarkable success in that difficult job as fell to Mr. Lambert's lot. He earned the good-will and cooperation of officials and the gratitude and appreciation of the public. Even his critics have no fault to find on the score of courtesy and politeness, and he has, no doubt, been among the best of the bureaucrats. The Aj says that the question of individual appointments is immaterial so long as the existing system of Government is not changed and the reins of administration placed into the hands of elected representatives of the people. This being the case, we fail to understand why in one quarter the appointment of Mr. Lambert as Finance Member of the United Provinces is being bewailed and the supersession of Mr. Pim opposed. We sincerely hold that such a mentality and such an artificial agitation are harmful for the country and for the cause of Swaraj. The Oudh Akhbar congratulates Mr. Lambert on his appointment, referring to him as "the kind-hearted and distinguished civilian of our provinces."

Secretariat appointments.

The Leader writes:—We heartily congratulate Sir William Marris on the appointment of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad as Chief Secretary and of Mr. Panna Lal as Secretary for Education and Industries. These appointments do not increase the number of Indians in the Secretariat, but the office of the Chief Secretary is so important as things are that the new appointments should be taken as a net gain to Indian officers. Some of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad's utterances in the Council and, some of his acts and methods as Government Whip, have come in for sharp criticism from non-official members, but his ability, eloquence and devotion to duty have been acknowledged by his critics, not less than by those with whom he has acted. The duties of his new and higher office are thought to be more difficult and delicate, but we are confident that Kunwar Jagdish Prasad will be quite equal to them. Mr. Panna Lal is in the twentieth year of his service and deserved years ago the position of a Secretary to Government to which he has now been called. His ability is indisputable, and the Minister of Education and Industries should find him a sound adviser. We trust that both Kunwar Jagdish Prasad and Mr. Panna Lal will be confirmed in their new offices in January when the new Governor and the new Finance Member assume charge of their respective offices. The Advocate writes:—We congratulate Sir William Marris on the appointment of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad and Mr. Panna Lal, which will be hailed with satisfaction by the public.

Earl Winterton's speech.

The Pratap severely criticizes Earl Winterton's Parliamentary speech, and says:—The speech was full of hypocritical observations and was intended to show that the poor Englishmen were straining every nerve to do good to Indians, but that Indians were so unworthy that they were applying the axe to their own feet. His remarks regarding the diet of Indians do not hold good in view of the fact that they have not even coarse grain to eat. Through the kindness of the British Government starvation has made notable progress. The starvation and evil customs prevailing among us have pulverized us and turned men into beasts. Englishmen have done nothing to purge the country of these evil customs. The blame lies on them, for while proclaiming religious liberty by the beat of drum they have ensnared the people in foolishness and obstinacy. The machine-guns and the exchequer of the British Government will always be available for the protection of the branches of the peepal tree, the twigs of the tazias, follies of marriage processions, and hooliganism of Muharram so that people may remain occupied with these follies; but if some great task is undertaken for imparting strength to the heart and body of the youths of the country, extricating them from the clutches of the peepal tree and the pirs and leading them towards advancement and enlightenment we can say with certainty that all the forces of Lord Winterton's Government will be utilized under one excuse or other to undo it. They see their weakness in the strength of Indians and their fall in their organization. When there is such a conflict between the rulers and the ruled what can the Government do for the people? We have nothing to say against this. This is the inevitable consequence of foreign domination. What we resent is that people like Lord Winterton do not speak the truth, but indulge in oily speeches. The Shakti writes:—A perusal of Lord Winterton's speech shows that he cares very little for the welfare of India, and that his only concern is to fill the Indian Civil and Military services with an adequate number of Englishmen. Europeans, and specially Englishmen of the Conservative party, are in the habit of saying that Indians are mean, cowardly, incompetent, engrossed in religous strifes and fettered in social chains, and as such they are neither fit to carry on the work of administration, nor to lead the armies. There is no argument which can convince these men. We can only say to them that when it is our turn we shall also show the same spectacle which Shivaji showed to the Moghuls. Let the time come. Those men are in the wrong who think that as the non-cooperation movement has been suppressed and Indians are unarmed, they can be roasted (with guns). God's ways are mysterious. They work havoc. It is only a question of time. Nobody's pride lasts long. India will never be content without attaining self-government.

Reforms.

The Leader writes:—It is a capital contribution which Sir Sivaswamy Aiyar has opportunely made to the discussion on the subject of the coming Statutory Commission. It is characteristic equally of his thoughtfulness, his wisdom, his patriotism, his sense of fairness. We have no difficulty in endorsing almost every word he has said . . . It will be an insult to India for the British Government to set up an exclusively British Commission, and it will be the duty of self-respecting Indians to consider seriously if they will have anything to do with a body of external examiners whose verdict they should not find it extraordinarily difficult to anticipate. Commenting upon Lord Olivier's statement that complete self-government for India was not a question of practical politics, the Aj writes:—When such is the view of liberal and socialistic British politicians nothing can be expected from other Englishmen. This is why we urge that we should expect nothing from the Statutory Commission and take measures to compel the British authorities to negotiate with us on the question of Swaraj. There being a wide divergence between the people and the Congress it is idle to expect that the Statutory Commission will pay any heed to the demands of the Congress. We should rest assured that the Commission will finish its labours only by strengthening the bureaucracy. Swaraj would have become a question of practical politics if it has been rendered difficult, if not impossible, for the bureaucracy to utilize the man-power and money-power of India for the good of the Empire without granting Swaraj to her. Far from this being done the national assembly has become a house divided against itself and looks to the Commission itself for a favourable dispensation. This being the case we have to admit the truth of Lord Olivier's contention and hang our heads in shame.

Indian States.

The Aziz-i-Hind urges the Government of India to publish a communiqué to dispel the mischievous effect of the propaganda being carried on against States like Bharatpur, Jhabua and Tonk. The Riyasat has been publishing most damaging allegations against the last-mentioned State, and Government should publish a communiqué about it immediately so that evil-intentioned propagandists may be discouraged. The Desh Bhagat complains of Nadir Shahi oppression on Hindus in the Muslim State of Tonk and states that only recently at the village of Bisal Nivas, in the district of Nambahera, the police desecrated the havan bedi of certain Sadhus, beat the Mahant, and when the Sadhus resented this interference in religious matters and took up their lathis the police opened fire, and as a result several persons were wounded and sweets and havan materials worth thousands were destroyed. All this happened because the police did not receive a nazrana of Rs. 50. If justice is not done the Hindus of the locality will be forced to emigrate from the State.

The Bengal detenus.

Referring to an article in the Manchester Guardian that in Russia arrests are made without a warrant, and that the arrested man or woman is sent to prison or exile without any kind of legal procedure, simply by an administrative order, the Leader writes:—The writer of the article is probably unaware that in Bengal, under "civilized" British rule, young men have been similarly shut up, without any opportunity of establishing their innocence, by administrative order, and without any kind of legal procedure. If the Bolshevik system of dealing with political heretics has surpassed in its autocracy and cruelty the Tsarist, what is one to say of the Bengal Ordinance, the necessity of which and the policy underlying which have been repeatedly defended by Earl Winterton? When will the Government realize that the continued detention of political suspects in Bengal brings disgrace to its own reputation in addition to exasperating the feelings of the people and outraging their sense of justice and fairplay?

The Rangila Rasul Case.

THE agitation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases continues to be the chief topic of comment on communal lines. The Pioneer writes: It seems unfortunate that the leaders of the Muhammadan community cannot keep their followers within bounds. The vehemence of the Punjab agitation has now had repercussions on the Frontier, while well-meaning people in England have been induced to add fuel to fire by signing memorials. The Muhammadan community must be told the plain truth. In seeking to bemuse the administration by means of turbulent threats and comminations when all the time machinery is at work to dispose of its grievances, it is playing an anti-social part detrimental to its prestige and destructive of sympathy. Referring to the Muslim demand for legislation penalizing attacks on founders of religions the Aj says: Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's judgement affects all communities alike, and the condemnation and punishment of the reviler of the founders of religions should be left to public opinion which cannot tolerate for long any such attacks. The most serious objection against legislating on the subject is that it will affect historical research also. It will be difficult to decide whether the writer of the life of the founder of a religion has discussed it from the historical standpoint, or has been actuated by malice. The Hitaishi strongly condemns Muslim agitation against the Punjab High Court and says: The position of law courts, which form an integral part of the administrative machinery, has now been endangered not only in the Punjab, but the whole country. It is imperative, in the interest of efficiency of administration, that the perilous agitation engineered by the Punjab Muslims should be nipped in the bud. If these malicious attacks against the Hindus and the Government are not checked this spark of fire will develop into a widespread conflagration which it will be difficult to control. The Kshattriya Mitra justifies the action of Rajpal in subjecting the life of the Prophet to a searching criticism, and contends that truth cannot be suppressed by false criticism and that a true Prophet is proof against all calumnies. It points out that the Prophet has exhorted the Muslims to annihilate the heathens and therefore emphasises the necessity of Hindu unity through Sangathan and says that true Swaraj and Hindu Sangathan are synonymous. The Medina questions the wisdom of those who resorted to civil disobedience at Lahore in connexion with the Rangila Rasul affair and says:—Islam has laid down only two methods of asserting one's just rights—jehad (war) or patience. If there is strength and the necessary resources are available then we say that our Punjab brethren should proclaim jehad, otherwise, relying on divine inspiration, they should have patience and act with prudence and tact. For insults offered to the Prophet there is no remedy except an armed crusade, but all sensible men know that such a conflict will be disastrous for Muslims. The Najat says that the judgement of Kunwar Dalip Singh had produced so much excitement and provocation that it does credit to Muslims that they restrained themselves to such an extent. But those who could not suppress their just and natural resentment have been lodged in jail, while the wicked mischief-makers are at large. Government has by this attitude still further lowered among Muslims its reputation for justice. Muslims are justified in their demand that Kunwar Dalip Singh should not be allowed to continue in his present responsible office for which he is not fit. When judges can be influenced by their surrounding atmosphere to such an extent Government must take notice of their biassed acts. Al Aziz says: It was open to Mr. Justice Dalip Singh to use his discretion in upholding the conviction of Rajpal even though the law was defective and we think that he should resign, or should be forced to do so, as it was because of him that the Punjab High Court and British justice were disgraced. Besides, he must have been either cowed down or angered by the Muslim agitation and cannot be in a fit state of mind to deal impartially with Muslim cases and should vacate his seat on the Bench in the interests of justice.

The Muharram.

The disturbances which occurred at Bareilly and other places during the Muharram have evoked a good deal of communal recrimination. Hindu papers strongly protest against the attitude of the Bareilly police, especially of the Kotwal. The Abhudaya writes: What need was there for the Kotwal of Bareilly to enter the Arya Samaj temple and insult the members of that community when the authorities had issued no order forbidding the playing of music in the town. It is also said that in excitement he went to the altar with shoes on. We want that a thorough enquiry should be made in the matter. The Hindus of Bareilly think that this action of his encouraged the Muslims to take the law into their own hands. The Arya Mitra remarks: We feel confident that the United Provinces Government will make a proper enquiry into the Bareilly disturbance and bring the offenders to book, and that it will also take up the question of the unwarranted arrest of innocent Arya Samajists. We refrain from making any comments on this matter as it is still sub judice, but we cannot help stating that the Government should study the bellicose mentality of Muslims. We consider it our duty to warn the Government of this province that if it allows the irresponsibility and high-handedness of the Muslims to increase the situation will become very terrible. We particularly request the Government to make a thorough enquiry with a view to find out whether or not its Hindu or Muslim officials identify themselves with the interests of a particular party and display a biassed mentality. The Najat holds Hindus responsible for the riots at Calcutta, Bareilly, Sholapur and other places, and says: If Malaviyaji and Dr. Moonje have banished humanity and sympathy are there not even three or four Hindus who would purge their community of mischievous elements? We would not falsely blame the entire Hindu community for these misdeeds, but deplore the negligence of those people who have entrusted the godhead of the Hindu community to Mr. Malaviya and have themselves retired to grieve over bloody riots and the disgraceful acts of their community. The Mansur regrets that the discord-breeding spirit of Hindu sangathan has so fatally deprived some people of courtesy and sympathy that they do not hesitate to attack even the mourning processions of Muslims during the Muharram. At Calcutta, Sholapur, Bareilly, Multan, Jubbulpore, Sandila, Maurawan, Farrukhabad, in short at every place from which news about trouble during Muharram has been received the Sangathanist Hindus have been the first to make mischief and this is proved by the official communiqués and Associated Press messages. In the end we would inquire of Government how long it is going to tolerate the sangathan movement, which is responsible for so much bloodshed and for such sacrileges as the recent attacks on the Prophet. Government should bear in mind that if this wave of sangathanist lawlessness is not checked its own difficulties will also be enhanced. The Shuz holds the action of the Muslims of Bareilly in attacking Arya Samajists while they were reciting hymns in their temple within closed doors during the Muharram to be totally unjustified and inquires whether Aryas are now to be required to give up their prayers even. The Krishna says that the demand of the Muslims at Bareilly to stop music during the weekly divine service in the Arya Samaj temple while the Muharram procession was passing was extremely improper and foolish, and was inspired either by madness or by a desire to pick up a quarrel. As reported, the Muslim Kotwal rushed into the temple with two hundred Muslims and ascended the altar with shoes on. Most of the men present in the temple were willing to stop music, still arrests were made. It is stated that sacred threads of those taken to the lock-up were taken off. Certain European officials are also responsible for such Nadir Shahi acts as they encourage the Muslims by yielding to their unjust demands. In reality, everywhere there is Muslim Raj and not English Raj. Government is, however, committing a serious political blunder, as these very Muslims whom it is just now patting will turn round in the event of a foreign Muslim invasion and add to its embarrassments by joining the enemy. It should not lay the axe at its own root by alienating the Hindus by treating them unjustly. The Aryas of Bareilly did not show the spirit of Dayanand in consenting to stop music. They should have disobeyed orders and courted imprisonment. They should also have offered physical resistance when their sacred threads were being taken off and should have cheerfully welcomed punishment for struggling with the policemen who touched their bodies. Anyway, we regard it as against the self-respect of an Arya to submit meekly to his body being touched by a policeman, and we are sorry for the weakness and cowardice of the Bareilly Aryas.

Hindu-Muslim Relations.

Referring to the forcible abduction of Hindu women and children in Bengal and elsewhere tho Anand writes: All this is being done to extirpate the Hindus altogether, but it is a pity that our Government does not display firmness in putting a stop to it, and is thereby encouraging the hooligans. It is the duty of the Government to get such cases investigated by impartial officials and bring the offenders to book. The Medina discusses at length the causes of the present communal tension and attributes it to "the innate narrow-mindedness of Hindus, their capitalistic mentality, greed and vindictiveness," and says that if they do not change their attitude towards Muslims the future historian will lay the responsibility for the slavery and subjection of India on the Hindus. The Desh Bhagat says that the English have by their wonderful diplomatic skill won the friendship of both Hindus and Muslims and utilize each community to crush the other. Those Muslims whose Quran forbids them to make friends with heathens and Christians and who have suffered so much from the English in the past are now their most ardent admirers. The Muslims have probably forgotten what the English have done to their Khalifa and to Bahadur Shah, the Emperor of Delhi, and how they have annexed Mesopotamia, and how the people of that country are cursing Indian Muslims for their sad fate. If they were to ask of any patriotic Muslim politicians they would learn that the English still occasionally employ strategems to ruin or conquer Turkey, Egypt, Afghanistan, Persia and Arabia, etc. Muslims have probably also forgotten the atrocities they suffered in the Jallianwala Bagh and elsewhere during the Punjab Martial Law days. Alas! Indian Muslims and their leaders are to-day so drugged with selfishness that, in spite of the warnings of their co-religionists who breathe the air of freer climes and are therefore more wideawake, they are unaware that the cup they are drinking from English hands contains poison, not syrup. British friendship gives the Muslims a few more posts and a few sweet words from the lips of Englishmen. They can also harass Hindus more freely, and a few leaders might be receiving heavy secret subsidies from British statesmen. It is thus the Muslim leaders, who ally themselves with the British and incite the innocent masses, that gain. The masses themselves are being ground down by ever-recurring riots and lose all along the line. We warn Indian Muslims that by cultivating British friendship and alienating Hindus they are not only encompassing their own ruin, but are also making it possible for Englishmen to injure other Islamic countries seriously. It is the cherished desire of Englishmen that Hindus and Muslims should fight amongst themselves and Hindu feeling should be worked up against Muslims so that, in the event of war with Russia and Afghanistan siding with her, Hindu aid might be utilized to deprive the Afghans of their independence. Again, this is the precious opportunity to gain India's freedom, and Russia and Afghanistan desire that Hindus and Muslims should unite and strive for their country's independence so that the British Government, which is setting both communities by the ears, may be extirpated for ever from India and Indians may live in peace and comfort.

Appointment of the Finance Member.

"Fair-play," writing in the Indian Daily Telegraph, strongly criticizes the Leader's remarks on Mr. Lambert's appointment as Finance Member, and says: It may be that Mr. Lambert does not possess a glib tongue or the smiling face of a deceptive official, but, those who know him will agree that he is just to a fault and is possessed of a kind heart within a somewhat rough exterior of the typical Britisher. He is responsible for many a progressive measure of administration during the six years of his work as Chief Secretary, and one could quote many illustrations of his having made no difference between an Indian and a European. Commenting on the same subject the Hitaishi writes: It is our firm conviction that it is simply waste of time and energy to adjudicate upon the propriety or otherwise of a particular appointment as long as the reins of administration are not controlled by the elected representatives of the people. Under the existing constitution there is no material difference between a good Indian or a bad European. We, therefore, fail to understand the expression of regret over the appointment of Mr. Lambert as Finance Member and the protest against the supersession of Mr. Pim. We sincerely feel that such a mentality and such artificial agitation are detrimental to the interests of the country and are calculated to stand in the way of Swaraj. The Shakti writes: Mr. Lambert, though an able man, is a diplomat, and an inveterate opponent of the aspirations of Indians. The Azad heartily congratulates Mr. Lambert on his appointment as Finance Member and says that he is a capable, impartial, and experienced officer. No doubt, he is free from show and diplomacy, and is a frank person and always says what he feels to one's face, but he possesses a sympathetic heart and tries to discharge his duties honestly. He inclines more towards caution in the matter of political reforms, but if he is convinced by argument of the justice of any demand he becomes a great supporter of it. Anyway, he has been serving this province for thirty years and has been an important limb of the Government for the last six years, and we trust he will discharge his new responsibilities most satisfactorily. The Aziz-i-Hind congratulates Mr. Lambert on his selection by Government as Finance Member and says: There is no doubt that Mr. Lambert is a very honest and impartial officer and always discharges his duties with great industry and ability. We are also very much gratified at his appointment, inasmuch as he will never come under the influence of Mr. Chintamani and other liberal leaders. The Mashriq is extremely gratified at the appointment of Mr. Lambert as Finance Member, and says that it will be welcomed by the people of these provinces. The editor states that he has found no Chief Secretary in his time to be as politic and statesman-like as Mr. Lambert, and is certain that Sir Alexander Muddiman will be satisfied with his appointment. Words fail to praise the wisdom and aptitude of Sir William Marris for making right selections.

Secretariat Appointments.

With only one exception newspapers warmly thank the Governor for the appointment of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad as Chief Secretary, and of Mr. Panna Lal as Education Secretary, and express the hope that they will be confirmed in their new offices. The Hamdam pays a tribute to the sense of justice of Sir William Marris and to his recognition of merit in appointing Kunwar Jagdish Prasad as Chief Secretary, and says that the people of these provinces will be undoubtedly grateful that an Indian has for the second time been appointed Chief Secretary to the local Government. Kunwar Jagdish Prasad is a capable and noted civilian who, besides filling administrative and judicial offices in various districts, has been a very successful Education and Industries Secretary for more than four years. He is extremely popular among all political parties in the Council and belongs to a respectable family of these provinces, long reputed for its love of learning, large-heartedness, and freedom from prejudice. We are sure he will fill his new office with credit if he is allowed to stay at his post for a reasonable time and not shunted off to various commissions like Sir Atul. The Oudh Akhbar says that if the appointment of black Indians to public offices hitherto reserved for white-skinned civilians is proof of a change in "the angle of vision" then the appointment as Chief Secretary of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad is surely an event which gives great hopes for the future. The far-sightedness, statesmanship, and sensibleness of Sir William Marris are acknowledged, and, before the close of his régime he has opened for Indians a door which, if not altogether closed, had been only half-open up till now. The Haqiqat writes: Kunwar Jagdish Prasad is a capable, eloquent and intelligent Civilian who, as member of the Council for the last seven years, has not only gained experience of it, but has also been popular among all the parties barring the Swarajists. There could have been no better selection for the post. The Aziz-i-Hind, while admitting that Kunwar Jagdish Prasad and Mr. Panna Lal are capable, and that it is the duty of Indians to rejoice over their elevation, questions whether, when Hindu-Muslim relations are strained, the appointment of an Indian, be he a Hindu or a Muslim, to the post of Chief Secretary is proper, and wonders in what light the Muslims will regard this generosity of the United Provinces Government. We think that Government should act with great circumspection in the matter and should not displease Muslims by superseding Mr. Crosthwaite, who is senior and in every way entitled to the post of Chief Secretary.

Proposed Press Legislation.

Referring to Mr. Craik's speech in the Punjab Legislative Council, regarding the control of the Press, the Pratap concedes that the charges against the "gutter press" are true, but contends that the blame for creating the present atmosphere lies on the present system of government. The Abhyudaya writes : We do not want to say anything in defence of filthy newspapers. No condemnation is too strong of those whose sole aim is to make money, but still we are not in favour of such a legislation. If the Government frames a rule that the man under whose administration riots take place will be held responsible for them, there will be no more riots in spite of the existence of filthy newspapers. The Sada-i-Muslim recalls the havoc wrought among newspapers by the Press Act, and says that, thanks to the foul-mouthed Hindu papers and their ring-leader Rajpal of Rangila Rasul fame, the entire Press of India is again in danger of suffering from the calamity of a new Press law. It is to be hoped that all sober-minded persons, both Hindus and Muslims, who have the freedom of the Press at heart, will agitate against the proposed piece of legislation. While admitting the truth of Mr. Craik's statement in the Punjab Council about the irresponsible writings of the "gutter press" in the Punjab, Al Khalil holds the provincial leaders really responsible for this state of affairs as they carry the palm in preaching communal and religious hatred and generally control and finance newspapers. Many members of the Punjab Council also help such newspapers, and communal feeling can be improved not by imposing restrictions on the Press, but by removing the trouble at its source.

Political Propaganda.

The Aj refers to the twofold objects of Mr. Patel's visit to Europe, namely, to prove the fitness of Indians for Swaraj and to study the Parliaments of various countries with a view to effect improvements in the Indian Legislative Assembly, and says that this shows that even the greatest of men of this country have fallen victim to slave mentality. Both these objects are harmful for India. It would have been much better if Mr. Patel had not undertaken his visit to foreign countries. The way in which he conducted himself in England has done injury to the country, has brought disgrace on the Congress, and has degraded his high position and his great personality. In the course of an article, recounting the evils of Western capitalism and imperialism, the Medina writes : China has fallen a victim to the machinations of the Western demons who, in the garb of capitalism, are dominating the country. Poor India, too, which has for a century and-a-half been a prey to the deceitfulness of a capitalistic Government, could not escape from the grave evils of capitalism which are manifesting themselves in diverse political and religious forms. Before the domination of India by the Western nation there were no Hindu-Muslim disturbances, there was no tension among the various political bodies, and no mutual breaking of heads. The paper welcomes the formation of a "Republican" party in the Congress, and appeals to the Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and Parsees to strengthen this party and thereby to dispel the illusion of constitutional agitation and prepare the way to true liberty without which the condition of India cannot be improved.

Communal Representation.

Referring to the Punjab Muslims' manifesto, opposing joint electorates, the Pioneer writes : The objections to a joint electorate are plainly stated in the manifesto, but the signatories do not appear to realize that the longer the separate electorate system is maintained without any attempt being made to move, perhaps by stages, toward a joint electorate the more difficult it will be to attain that unity which is so essential to sound advancement. The Leader writes: The separatists who see many imaginary virtues in separate electorates do not realise the immense mischief these have done. Much of the manifestation of the narrow communal spirit can be traced to this source, but the unhealthy results of separate electorates have been cited as arguments in support of their retention. We are sorry for the attitude of the Punjab Muslim councillors, but we believe that the day is not far off when they will revise their views as a number of other strong supporters of separate electorates have done. The Indian Daily Telegraph opines that the manifesto definitely marks a stage in the progress of communal tension and says : There is no doubt that the Muslim mass mind will rally round this cry and leaders will find that they have either to go with the mob or be left adrift to chew their own cud.

Death of General Dyer.

Newspapers comment extensively on the death of General Dyer. The Leader writes : The name of General Dyer is associated with a bloody deed which sent a shock of horror and spread a wave of indignation throughout the country and laid the foundations for the starting of a subversive movement which assumed alarming proportions. He rendered the greatest disservice to British rule in India and the painful and bitter memory of his fell deed will live long. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: But for his part in the atrocity of Jallianwala Bagh, the cruel specimen of humanity known as Dyer would never have been known to India and to the world, and his death might have hardly evoked any interest beyond the military circles. As it is, his death means, to India, the passing away of a monster-minded man, who did not hesitate to shoot down an unarmed and helpless populace in cold blood. There is no palliation for such an act; it marks him out as a detestable type to be avoided. The Aj says that General Dyer was a specimen of British frightfulness and will long be remembered as such by the thinking world. General Dyer is dead, but the spirit of Dyerism still survives and manifests itself from time to time in Mesopotamia, China, and on a smaller scale in India also. The Hamdam writes: Dyer has left this world for good, but has left behind him a monument of cruelty and callousness in the shape of the well-known Jallianwala Bagh episode. Those Britishers who regard it as their greatest national service to deprive the subject peoples of their natural rights will probably call Dyer a hero, but India will always look upon him as a Nero. We can best preserve his memory in India by keeping before our eyes the bloody scene of the Jallianwala Bagh, where the blood of the Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs mingled together and by giving up our mutual dissensions and exhibiting the same unique example of unity which was witnessed at the time of the occurrence.

The Reserve Bank Bill.

Referring to the "important victory" which the popular party in the Select Committee on the Reserve Bank Bill won on the question of the constitution of the directorate the Leader writes: If the Reserve Bank is to fulfil its real object it should be a State Bank capable of acting independently of Government in regulating the currency and credit policy in the best interests of the country and along sound economic lines. The exchange and currency policy of Government in the past has been such as to arouse a great deal of distrust among Indian nationalists and businessmen, and there is, therefore, a great deal of justification for the proposal for the representation of Indian Legislatures on the directorate of the Reserve Bank and for a majority of elected Indian members in its constitution. The Aj says that the refusal of Sir Basil Blackett to proceed with the consideration of the Reserve Bank Bill owing to the Select Committee rejecting his scheme regarding the directorate of the bank illustrates the sense of responsibility of these rulers. Sir Basil Blackett's entire scheme regarding the bank clearly shows that he attached greater importance to the interests of London than to those of India.

Muslim Affairs.

The Aligarh Mail refers to the number of Hindu and Muslim judges in the Punjab High Court and says: From these facts it is evident that the Lahore High Court Bench is monopolised by Hindus with Sir Shadi Lal as the Presiding Deity of the court. We wonder why, in the present circumstances, it should be unreasonable for one to propose that the court be re-christened as the Hindu High Court of Lahore.

Indian States.

Al Khalil says that it is credibly informed that the heir-apparent of Tonk was given a cup containing poison by one of the attendants of the Nawab when the prince came to pay his respects to his father on the occasion of the latter's departure for Bombay. When the Nawab reached Kotah station he received a telegram informing him of the heir-apparent's death, but refused to return, even though advised to that effect by the Agent to the Governor-General. The Political department should inquire into the matter and publish a communiqué giving full details.

The Rangila Rasul case.

The Rangila Rasul and the Muslim Outlook cases continue to receive prominent attention, but the tone of comments in Muslim papers shows considerable improvement. Hindu papers emphasize the dangers of Muslim agitation. The Sainik writes:—The fury of the Muslim agitation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case is bewildering. Things have come to such a pass that in the Frontier Province Muslims are bent on committing atrocities on Hindus whose lives and property are in serious danger. Yet the Government pats the Muslims on the back. It is time that Hindus, Muslims and the Government took heed. Hindus should give up cowardice and untouchability and should organize themselves. Muslims should abandon their impetuosity and fanaticism and Government should restrain Muslim barbarity and lawlessness. Referring to the Muslim demand for the amendment of the law so as to make attacks on prophets and religious heads punishable with death the Abhyudaya remarks:—We can understand the Muslim demand for the amendment of the law so as to penalize attacks on prophets and religious heads and in this the Muslims have our whole-hearted support. But we fail to understand their mentality when they insist on this offence being made punishable with death on the basis of the injunctions contained in the Quran and the Hadis have no place in the Penal Code. The Vartman complains that as a result of the agitation in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case Muslims of the Frontier are seeking to ruin the Hindus of that province. Mullahs of villages are being incited by means of venomous speeches. Various reports go to show that the Muslims of the Frontier Province have broken all restraints of law and have taken into their head to beat the Hindus to a pulp. In short anarchy is reigning in the Frontier Province. Blood begins to boil when we hear of the recent mean actions of Muslims. In fact we think that now Muslims have become mad and this madness will soon lead them to ruin for the world of to-day does not want to see such a blood-thirsty religion flourish for long. Government is not taking any action because the Hindus are too weak to be able to embarrass it. They are not prepared to kill and be killed if their demands are not conceded and therefore they deserve to be ignored. Does this not show that the Government sides with those who carry the rod? The community which becomes ready to die and to kill makes the Government concede even its unjust demands. But he who appeals to justice is mercilessly strangled. Truly, this is the age of "might is right." Let the Government remain apathetic, it is in its interest to be so and this is why it has become blind. But will our national leaders also fail us? Discussing the various demands of Muslims in connexion with the Rangila Rasul case the Medina says that the basic demand should be that the Government and a full Bench of the Punjab High Court should ask Kunwar Dalip Singh to make a public declaration that in his judgement he had really the helplessness of law in view and was not actuated by any other consideration and that he was very sorry for the unrest and agitation which had been caused among Indian Muslims by his judgement. The effects of such a declaration will be reassuring alike for the Muslims, the Government and the public. The next demand should be the addition of a clear provision in the criminal law penalizing attacks on prophets and founders of religions. If these demands are not conceded Muslims will resort to civil disobedience and Government will

the painful and bitter memory of his fell deed will live long. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: But for his part in the atrocity of Jallianwala Bagh, the cruel specimen of humanity known as Dyer would never have been known to India and to the world, and his death might have hardly evoked any interest beyond the military circles. The effects of such a declaration will be reassuring alike for the Muslims, the Government and the public. The next demand should be the addition of a clear provision in the criminal law penalizing attacks on prophets and founders of religions. If these demands are not conceded Muslims will resort to civil disobedience and Government will have to face greater difficulties than those which it had to encounter in connexion with the Sikh agitation. This will also show that Government itself is the greatest enemy of inter-communal unity and foments communal disturbances to serve its secret and mean ends.

The Muharram.

The Bareilly riots continue to evoke communal recriminations. The Leader writes:—It is well that the case against the Arya Samajists of Bareilly has been withdrawn, but the matter ought not to be allowed to rest there. An inquiry should be made into the handling of the situation by the officers present. It was very unfortunate from the point of view of the maintenance of law and order in future that a thoroughly unreasonable demand for the stoppage of music on the part of a rowdy section of the procession was sought to be enforced by the Kotwal, for his action implied the triumph of truculence and the humiliation of the law-abiding. The Indian Daily Telegraph says:—The Bareilly incident has considerably agitated the Arya Samajists all over the country. There is not a single important town in these provinces where the Arya Samajists have not met and recorded their indignation at the insult offered to them. Popular feeling, thus stirred, must exercise profound influence throughout Hindu India. Remember, a religious insult is never forgiven. The Anand says that the release of the Arya Samajists who were arrested at Bareilly while offering prayers in a temple on the occasion of the Muharram is not sufficient for the restoration of peace. It is also the duty of the District Magistrate to arrest and punish the goondas who were responsible for the riot and to remove such officials as were guilty of partiality. The Kailash alludes to the communal tension in the country with special reference to the Bareilly riot and remarks:—The accounts of the atrocities perpetrated by the Muslims upon the Hindus in the Arya Samaj temple at Bareilly have shocked the feelings of the entire Hindu population. We can no longer tolerate the Multan atrocities. While scrupulously refraining from playing the rôle of an aggressor the Hindus ought to retaliate because self-defence is the basic principle of self-preservation. Hindus have become very anxious to protect their religion and they are seriously thinking of engaging in a conflict with the Government of India for this purpose. The Hamdam regrets that though the Arya Samajists started trouble at Bareilly by their folly and wickedness in insisting on music in their temple during the passing of the Muharram procession they have not yet stopped their provocative actions. In the afternoon of July 21, while Muslims were offering their Juma prayers in the Juma mosque at Naumahla the Aryas seriously interrupted their devotions by engaging in music at a place very near by, though they had no justification for such music. The Hindus held a mass meeting the same evening in the Arya Samaj Orphanage which is also near by and it is said that the speakers there spat much venom against Muslims. Such meetings are undesirable while the atmosphere is so vitiated. It is a pity that while discharging the Arya accused the Collector made no announcement regarding the Muslim accused and this strange and unjust procedure is causing general disappointment and resentment among Muslims while encouraging the Aryas who regard it as the triumph of their propaganda.

Communal representation.

Hindu papers strongly criticize the manifesto issued by Muslim members of the Punjab Legislative Council regarding joint electorates. Muslim opinion is sharply divided, the majority of papers favouring the Delhi scheme. The Aligarh Mail says:—It is time that Muslims organized an all-India agitation against joint electorates. For that purpose it is urgently needed that we should revive a branch of the All-India Muslim League in every district of every province. If we set up such an all-India organization we shall create a power which will make our voice heard. The Aj writes:—We have had enough of communalism and mutual head-breaking as a result of communal representation and if we are not to involve the country in utter ruin we should bid farewell to the system and revise the policy underlying the sangathan and tanzim movements. The Medina remarks:—The proposals of the Delhi Conference regarding joint electorates were calculated to promote national interests as well as the communal interests of Muslims. Yet they have been rashly opposed by the Muslim members of the Punjab Council. So far as we think the present councillors, whether Hindus or Muslims, owe their seats to communal bigotry and communal strife and therefore oppose every scheme which is directed against communal struggle. If after some delay and sacrifice Muslim majority can be assured in Sind, Baluchistan, the Frontier Province, the Punjab and Bengal then this advantage does not deserve to be sacrificed for some fleeting benefits of separate representation. The Najat characterizes the manifesto as altogether puerile and says:—It is the saddest misfortune of Muslims that their leaders even after undergoing so many calamities have not acquired the capacity for corporate action and always commit some folly whenever any occasion for unity offers itself. In spite of repeated reverses and discomfitures Muslim leaders have remained only arm-chair politicians. Al Khalil condemns the manifesto and asserts that separate electorates have been responsible not only for antagonism between Hindus and Muslims but also for discord among the latter themselves. It is surprising that a liberal-minded gentleman of the standing of Dr. Iqbal has appended his signature to the manifesto which appears to be nothing more than a manifestation of the dread of most of the signatories that as they are possessed with the evil spirit of rank communalism, they would have absolutely no chance of election from a joint electorate. The Muslims being in a majority in the Punjab should not show any nervousness there and it is really creditable for the Muslims of Bombay and Madras that though they are in a minority they have bravely voted for joint electorates. It is to be hoped that these gentlemen of the Punjab will reconsider their views and will not allow a passing phase to influence their decision in a matter on which the future of India so largely depends.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers are giving a good deal of prominence to reports of kidnapping of Hindu women and children by Muslims and urging the need for strong measures for suppressing the evil. The murder of two Arya Samaj leaders at Mount Abu and Bahraich has also received wide attention and is attributed by some papers to organized Muslim conspiracy. Referring to the reports that girls and women continue to be kidnapped, abducted and ravished in Bengal the Leader writes: - If law and order had been a transferred subject and such a large number of cases of abduction, rape and kidnapping as are being reported had continued to occur almost unchecked, they would have been cited as conclusive evidence of the unfitness of Indians to protect life, honour and property. The indifference or callousness of the Government which calls itself civilized, deserves the strongest condemnation. It is time that it awoke to its solemn duty in the matter and adopted strong measures to deal with the utmost promptness and severity with those ruffians who are committing such revolting crimes against women in Bengal. The Arya Mitra refers to the murder of Hindu leaders by Muslim goondas at Bahraich and Mount Abu and remarks:—The history of Muslim rule is full of murders in the name of religion. Even women and children were not spared. It is not at all strange or surprising that assassinations should follow in the wake of a religion which owes its existence to the blade of the sword or to the point of the dagger. Now that the murders of Badrishah and Bhairo Singh have seen the light of the day can the charge of a Muslim conspiracy behind these murders be refuted as easily as it was on the occasion of the assassination of Swami Shraddhanand? Muslims have begun to use the last weapon in their hands and if Government does not energetically intervene betimes the situation will become more serious. Hindus, however, do not fear death and if Aurangzeb's sword could not destroy Hinduism the wrath of the present-day Muslims can do us but little injury. The Shankar remarks:—Muslims are bringing discredit on themselves and Islam by indulging in murder and bloodshed. This, however, does not pain us for the blood of these martyrs will strengthen the foundation of Hinduism. What really grieves us is the indifference of the Government which calls itself the custodian of justice, despite the steady increase in the number of such crimes.

Secretariat appointments.

Further appreciatory comments on the appointments of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad and Mr. Panna Lal have appeared in the press. The Mashriq writes:—How gratifying is the news that Kunwar Jagdish Prasad is to officiate as Chief Secretary! His family, gifts and virtues are well known. His administrative capacity and intellectual attainments are acknowledged on all hands. Best of all, he holds correct views regarding Hindu-Muslim questions and his educational policy was very independent and commendable. The Oudh Akhbar deplores the depraved mentality of Indians which manifests itself in rank communal suspicion on every occasion and condemns the action of the Aziz-i-Hind in criticizing the appointment of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad in spite of the fact that he is altogether free from communal bias and in spite of the difficulty experienced by the nationalists in securing high posts for Indians. Qazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmad writing in the Aziz-i-Hind assures it that both Kunwar Jagdish Prasad and his family have been noted for their impartial attitude towards Hindus and Muslims and that it need have no fear from him on that score. Kunwar Jagdish Prasad's training and record show that he cannot make invidious distinctions between Hindus and Muslims. The favour done to Indians by Sir William Marris by this appointment should be appreciated. Mr. Panna Lal too is a capable officer and his appointment also should be welcomed. Commenting on the above, the editor welcomes both the appointments and hopes that the Kunwar Saheb's régime will prove as beneficial to Muslims as to other communities. It adds:—We are not opposed to any Hindu as such and look on both Hindus and Muslims with the same eye. We are, however, pained when we see some Hindu officers showing prejudice and hatred in their treatment of Muslims. This is what is fanning the flames of inter-communal discord. The Anand Pracharak writes:—Kunwar Jagdish Prasad possesses extensive Secretariat experience. He has won fame both as Secretary and District Magistrate and that is why his appointment has produced not only satisfaction but gratification throughout the province. He is the second Indian to be appointed to this office and Sir William Marris deserves public gratitude for making as apt a selection as his predecessor Sir Harcourt Butler. Kunwar Jagdish Prasad's place as Education Secretary will be taken by Mr. Panna Lal, who is a scholar and an industrious and experienced officer. All these appointments are in every way commendable and Government is to be congratulated on making the best selections.

Proposed press legislation.

The Aj concedes that there is urgent need for fresh legislation to suppress attacks on religions and communities but contends that this does not mean that the old Press Act should be revived or that absolute power should be given to the bureaucracy to deal with the press. It urges that the legal measure to deal severely with offenders should be enacted only for one year and that it should provide for an advisory committed which should be consulted by the Government before sanctioning prosecution. The advice of such a committee should be binding on it. The members of the advisory committee should be elected by the elected members of the Legislative Councils. If the bureaucracy be willing to suppress communal and religious hatred under these restrictions, all well-wishers of the country should help it in the enactment of the new legislation, otherwise it would be better to suppress the evil by some other means, such as the formation of a joint committee of Hindu and Muslim scholars which should examine the offending publication and give its decision after hearing both the parties. Of course the committee will not have the authority to punish the delinquent, but it will not be possible to disregard the moral influence of its decisions. The Desh Bhagat says that afraid of the growing Bolshevik propaganda in China spreading to India and thinking itself unable to accomplish its aims through the existing sections of the Penal Code, Government wants to forge new chains to deprive the Indian press of its liberty. To stifle nationalist opposition and to gain popular support for such legislation the authorities are accusing newspapers of being responsible for the communal tension in the country. To mask its designs still further Government has instigated loyalist Indians to take the initiative in the matter. Some papers have no doubt been responsible for fomenting inter-communal hatred but the present law is quite sufficient to deal with them and the only trouble is that Government is not seriously inclined to put down such papers. As a matter of fact there would be no communal riots in the country if Government did not see an advantage to itself in their occurrence. We know how in the days of non-cooperation Government freely prosecuted editors under sections 124A and 153A and encouraged libel actions against them by its officers and proscribed the papers. In fact when Government was serious it employed every device and was to a certain extent also successful. If Government were sincere, it could to-day also easily use these self-same methods to punish communal papers and thus change their attitude. We are therefore firmly of opinion that the agitation for a new press law is meant only to stifle Nationalist Hindu journals, which are striving for India's freedom and openly spreading Bolshevik ideas. A member of the Legislative Assembly hailing from the United Provinces wants to propose that newspapers should not be allowed to appear without depositing an adequate initial security with Government. This means that only capitalists can start newspapers and they will naturally support Government. It is to be hoped that Indians will see through this subtle move of Government and strenuously oppose any fresh press legislation.

The Reforms.

Extremist papers deplore the importance attached by prominent Congress leaders to the forthcoming Royal Commission on Reforms and regard it as a sign of their degeneration. The Pratap remarks :—We cannot restrain ourselves when we find even Congressmen interesting themselves in the personnel of the Statutory Commission or its terms of reference. They swear by self-determination and freedom and hanker after reforms. Our leaders are being carried away by the storm of the Statutory Commission and before it is too late Congress workers should take heed and dissuade the Congress from co-operating with the Commission, otherwise they will be guilty of throwing the country into the abyss of retrogression for which the future generation will never forgive them. The Abhyudaya remarks that India does not want a commission consisting of judges and members of Parliament. It wants a commission in which Indians who are reputed for their patriotism and independence and are honoured by the country may preponderate.

Death of General Dyer.

Obituary notices of General Dyer, which have appeared in most of the papers, recall the Jallianwala Bagh "massacre" and other "atrocities" during the martial law days in the Punjab and read in his sufferings during his last days a warning for others who may be disposed to commit similar deeds. The Pratap remarks :—General Dyer was like a curse to India and therefore his death will be remembered only like an evil dream. A man who shot down hundreds of persons was simply dismissed from service and we could do nothing against him. Even to-day such sinners and brutes in human form as Colonel Frank Johnson and Colonel O'Brien and wretches like Bosworth-Smith who made our mothers and sisters naked and flogged them and who spat on their faces and called them "bitches, asses, pigs, and flies," and mean fellows like Malik Lal Khan and Rai Shri Ram are proclaiming our impotence by continuing to remain in the good books of the Government. What is the good of showing impotent rage? We shall have to cultivate strength. We shall cease to have Dyers and O'Dwyers only when we have become strong. The Surfaraz says that General Dyer's death has instead of arousing sympathy for him, revived memories of the Jallianwalla Bagh and this was because he was unrepentant to the last. May his troubles during the latter portion of his life and his prolonged sufferings during his fatal illness serve as a warning to Sir Michael O'Dwyer and others who are imbued with General Dyer's spirit. The Hindustani recalls General Dyer's action in the Jallianwala Bagh and his other atrocities in the Punjab during the martial law days and says that Indians may forgive this dead man but they can never forget Jallianwala. It is a pity that he died unrepentant and his end was a long drawn out agony. Indians may pardon General Dyer for all his atrocities and may in their generosity even pray for his soul but they can never forgive that tyrannical Government and its members who did not award any punishment to such a heartless murderer and who did not condemn his deed but rather patted him on the back. Are the members of such a Government fit to be called just and civilized? All Englishmen and Indians should learn a lesson from the life-history and bitter end of this General of Nadirshahi temperament.

Political propaganda.

Referring to Mr. Cook's open advocacy of the Russian system of Government, the Desh Bhagat says that though it is gratifying that Mr. Cook has freely expressed his views, it is exceedingly surprising that Mr. Baldwin's Government does not dare to lay its hands on Mr. Cook in spite of such open attack on the Royal Crown. This is simply because it fears that Mr. Cook's arrest would usher a bloody revolution in England as the labourers of England are so well organized that they can bring the Government to its knees in a moment. On the other hand in India people are condemned to death for waging war against the King even if they merely express a desire for freedom. Lovers of liberty in India should, therefore, so strengthen themselves by organizing peasants and workers that the new Fort of Delhi may shake even without any attack. Organization of strength is a great thing and that is what emboldened Mr. Cook to think of attacking the Royal Crown. Referring to the reports of British military preparations and to a note in the Pioneer on the possibility of Russo-Afghan operations on the North-West Frontier, the Zul Qarnain says that the Urdu press is suspecting a British offensive against Afghanistan and warns Government that if it attacks Afghanistan, it will involve itself in a world war and, however intense its desire to subdue Russia, the economic consequences both for itself and the Indian people would be simply disastrous.

The Bengal detenus.

The Vartman says that the Bengal detenus are enduring hellish tortures and that hundreds of them are preparing for death. There are no arrangements for their treatment and even if any one is dangerously ill he is not sent to hospital. The Government will not release them unless it is forced to do so Instead of passing resolutions in the Assembly and Councils we should prepare the people so that we may be in a position to offer an ultimatum to Government and compel it to bend. Mass civil disobedience alone can bring about such a situation. The country will then be ready for sacrifice as it was during the non-cooperation movement. The goddess of sacrifice is thirsting for blood. Her thirst will not be quenched until people come forward to sacrifice themselves at the altar of Satyagrah. Those who are anxious for the release of the detenus should come forward with bare breasts for sacrifice. The Pratap publishes a letter complaining of ill-treatment of the Bengal detenus interned in the Naini jail.

Indian States.

The Haqiqat regrets that though Malerkotla is a small state it is imbued with the same Nadirshahi spirit which pervades many Indian states and which is responsible for their growing unpopularity. It is no small matter to despatch thirteen poor peasants with bullets and it is a pity that the Nawab Saheb of Malerkotla attaches even less value to the lives of his fellow-countrymen than those of cattle. The souls of the innocent persons killed in Malerkotla are to-day writhing for vengeance in the same way as those of the martyrs of Kulkati (Barisal). Will the Government of India order no inquiry and inflict no punishment for this shedding of innocent blood? The Aziz-i-Hind wonders at the silence of the Government when it is aware of the true facts about the death of the heir-apparent of Tonk and appeals to it to put an end to the lying and mischievous propaganda against the Nawab Saheb by publishing an official disclaimer.

United Provinces Police.

The Leader complains of excessive Muslim predominance in the United Provinces Police and quoting statistics relating to the number of Hindu and Muslim deputy superintendents of police, sub-inspectors, head constables and kotwals writes:—The excessive representation of the Muslims in the police is probably not altogether unconnected with a certain bias in the administration of several districts which has led many Hindus to question the impartiality of Government in communal matters and some, even to ask whether they are living under British or Muslim rule. It is desirable in the interest of the reputation of the Government (if the Government think they have use for it) and of the maintenance of law and order that steps should be taken to constitute the police force on those principles of communal representation which have been avowed by itself. Or, let them take the wiser course of abandoning racial considerations altogether in all appointments in all the departments. If neither course is taken they will have to thank themselves for the growing distrust of their policy by the Hindus.

The Reserve Bank.

Referring to the demand for Muslim representation in the Board of Directors of the proposed Reserve Bank the Sainik writes:—By this craze for special representation our Muslim brethren are making themselves a laughing-stock of the whole world; they are ruining their country and injuring their own interests by poisoning the minds of Hindus.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers are greatly agitated over the reports of outrages on Hindus in the Frontier. The Vartman takes Hindu leaders severely to task for not taking any action in connexion with the atrocities committed on the Hindus of the Frontier Province by "cruel and barbarous" Muslims and says: Hindu civilization and Hindu religion are about to be wiped out, yet Hindu leaders remain apathetic. If such outrages had been committed anywhere on Muslims, there would have been anarchy. Of late Muslims seem to have been possessed by some devil. Their ambitions have begun to soar to the skies and unless they are crushed they will not come to their senses. It is, therefore, necessary to bring them to the right path. If Hindu leaders remain apathetic towards the misfortunes of the Hindus of the Frontier Province the time will not be far off when similar spectacles will be witnessed in the whole of India. Nothing can be accomplished unless the leaders are prepared to sacrifice their lives for preserving the Hindu society. In a subsequent issue the paper tries to make out that the outrages on the Hindus in the Frontier are the result of the "divide and rule" policy of the Government and says: The political unity of Hindus and Muslims in 1921 baffled crooked statesmen like Lord Reading. Seeing no other course, these crooked diplomats thought that nothing but the creation of communal enmity between the Hindus and Muslims could be to the interest of British domination. And this is what has actually happened. The mischievous bureaucracy, ignoring altogether the Proclamation of Queen Victoria sowed the seed of communal dissensions. The reprehensible policy of Lord Lytton, the Governor of Bengal, accentuated the differences to such an extent that the Hindu-Muslim tension spread all over India. The administration derived temporary benefit from these dissensions. Political agitation collapsed and heroic leaders like Mahatma Gandhi were forced into retirement. The plundering and ravaging indulged in by the goondas benefited the bureaucracy a good deal. If a Christian or a European had been even slightly molested in the Frontier 16-inch guns would have been employed and bomb-dropping aeroplanes would have been hovering for their protection. But it is a matter for deep regret that the Punjab Government remains unmoved in spite of the most terrible outrages in the Frontier. Hindus are being robbed, their houses are being burnt, and the most heinous outrages are being committed on their women. But the British military and law are unable to protect them. The despicable method which the bureaucracy is employing to serve its political ends is ruining its reputation. If the Government does not at once avenge the outrages committed in the Frontier twenty-five crores of Hindus will be forced to conclude that this Government is cowardly. If it cannot protect its own administration, how can it protect our rights? The Pratap remarks: We would suggest to the British Government that if it cannot control the tribal territory and protect the lives and property of its subjects there it should leave that province and withdraw its authority. In that case the Hindus of the tribal territory would at least be free from the evils of dual government. We want the Indian Muslims to express their candid opinion about the atrocities perpetrated by the Pathans upon the Hindus of the tribal territory. If it becomes clear that even thoughtful Muslims find it necessary to lend countenance to this whirlwind of Mullah fanaticism no nationalist will allow this fanaticism to stand in the way of the country's progress. The Abhyudaya writes: It is really surprising that the Government has not yet taken any action to stop the terrible atrocities that are being perpetrated upon the Hindus. It should realize that if the rowdies in the Frontier go on getting emboldened in this manner they will one day prove dangerous to the country as well as the Government. The Anand remarks: Unless Government shows firmness such incidents will continue to occur so much so, that a time will come when the Britishers will find themselves in as bad a plight as the Hindus. The Aj expresses surprise that though the book Tohfat ul-Hind which was first published some eighty-five years ago and which is sold even now in various cities contains a poem entitled "Katha Saloi" and other poems which attack Hindu gods in the most indecent and filthy language, yet no action has been taken in regard to it. It says that "Katha Saloi" which is the most objectionable portion of the book has also been separately published. This book is in no respect less objectionable than the Rangila Rasul and is undoubtedly creating communal hatred in the existing atmosphere of the country. The Gyanshakti contends that there can never be unity between Hindus and Muslims owing to the religious bigotry of the latter, and that if Hindus possessed even one-fourth of the bigotry and communalism of Muslims, they would make their mark in the world. It says that as India is all in all to the Hindus they should do what they want to do for her well-being on the strength of their own exertions and not depend upon others for it. It is now a question of life and death for Hindus. The Sada-i-Muslim complains that the Vartman always publishes anti-Muslim articles and referring to the article quoted above from that paper says: We fail to understand how far it is wise in the present surcharged atmosphere to invite Muslims to a conflict by suggesting the idea of crushing them. Who will be responsible if Muslims are provoked into action by such observations? It is still time for the authorities to take action as Muslims will be furiously enraged at hearing such words as these: "As long as Muslims are not crushed they will not be brought to their senses." If no action is taken, the result is certain to be that the peace of Cawnpore will be endangered. As to Hindus being actually able to crush Muslims and thus to bring them to their senses this is an impossibility for them. From the time of Hazrat Qasim setting foot on Indian soil till the acquisition of the dominion over India by the East India Company from the Muslim rulers no Hindu has been born in India brave enough to face the Muslims in open field. Now when the Muslims are in sufficient numbers in India and when the feeling of religious brotherhood is daily growing among Islamic countries how is it possible for the Hindus, who cannot even shake off their own fetters of serfdom, to crush the Muslims. It is, however, meet that Muslims should be forewarned of the thoughts of Hindus so that they may be forearmed. The Hamdam ridicules the contention of Professor Indra and Swami Ramanand, Secretaries, All-India Aryan League, in their memorial to the Viceroy that there was a conspiracy behind the murder of Swami Shraddhanand and regrets that the story of there being documentary evidence in the possession of Government in proof of such a conspiracy is being used by Aryas to inflame public feeling against Muslims. It goes on to say: We, therefore, appeal to the Government of India either to state the nature of this documentary evidence and the reason for its refusal to take action on it or, better still, to publish it so that the Arya propaganda may be thoroughly exposed.

The Risala Vartman case.

So far very few papers have commented on the judgement in the Risala Vartman case. Hindu papers regard the sentences as unduly severe. The Pioneer writes: It is to be hoped that the judgement will be received with the respect due to the learned judges delivering it and that there will be a cessation of the bitter controversy, which has been disfiguring Punjab and Frontier life during the last few months. In particular, we would condemn the gross impertinence of the Mahomedan politician who is reported to have declared that the result of the case will not affect the movement for the resignation of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh. If this kind of unworthy flamboyancy persists the Government should consider the possibility of taking suitable steps against those who give it expression. The Aj says that the judgement ought to give the quietus to the Rangila Rasul agitation and that it will do so unless the agitation has been started to serve the ends of self-seeking individuals. It holds that the sentences are disproportionately severe for the article in the Risala Vartman was undoubtedly a mere rejoinder to similar articles in the Muslim press. The Anand also regards the sentences as unduly severe, specially in view of the difference of opinion, as regards the applicability of section 153A to such writings. The Oudh Akhbar contrasts the heavy sentences in the Risala Vartman case with the light punishment in the Vichitra Jiwan case and says: The Punjab Government took special interest in the Vartman case on account of the Rangila Rasul agitation and no heed was paid to the protests of the accused against the case being taken up originally by the High Court. The Muslim agitation has no doubt succeeded but we fear that the conviction of the accused will aggravate the communal tension which might have remained stationary if they had been acquitted. It must be said that the sentences show insufficient regard for the age of the journal and inexperience of the author and the editor. A light punishment by way of warning should have suited the case. The Haqiqat is of opinion that the judgement will be generally viewed with satisfaction in Muslim India as it has overruled the verdict in the Rangila Rasul case. The sentences on the accused who were responsible for such filthy and profane literature as the "Trip to Hell" cannot be said to err on the side either of leniency or of severity in view of the nature of the offence. From every standpoint the judgement is quite fair and equitable. No Muslim could read with equanimity such writings and it is the duty of sensible Hindus also to show large-heartedness in this matter and to sympathize with Muslims.

The Reforms.

Referring to its special correspondent's cablegram that the India Office and Simla are believed to be agreed that Indian element should be absolutely excluded from the personnel of the Statutory Commission, the Leader writes: If the Statutory Commission is to be exclusively British and if the mind of the powers that be is what it is described as being, we cannot but agree that it will be both good sense and self-respect for Indians to leave the Commission alone. Well, at the moment the British in India happen to be able to have it their own way—thanks to the folly of Indians in quarrelling amongst themselves. But things will not for long remain what they are, and they will probably have to regret their short-sightedness and selfishness sooner than they may imagine at the moment. The Aligarh Mail strongly criticizes Mr. Muhammad Ali's advice that the Statutory Commission should be boycotted and says: The advice is the froth and foam of a destructively extremist brain which slurs over realities that are not convenient. Supposing we fall in with the boycott proposal of the Maulana, will the Indian convention do us any good? Our firm belief is that far from doing any good it will do us immense harm. The interests of the religious communities and political parties in this land clash so much that if an Indian convention were formed of their representatives they would split on the question of defining the special rights of their communities before framing a constitution which may lead us to democracy. Let the Commission come. We should welcome its inquiry and give evidence before it. This should specially be the policy of Muslims. We feel we need not tutor the Muslims on this point. They are in no mood to boycott the Commission. We know they will never take to such a suicidal policy, whatever the Maulana may say or do. The Sudharak remarks: The farce of the appointment of the Statutory Commission is being enacted with a view to prove our unfitness for swaraj and to convince the world of the honest intentions of the British Government. We do not want the Statutory Commission and we do not hold the British Government to be competent enough to test our fitness for a further instalment of reforms. What we want is swaraj, not as a gift from the British Government, but as a matter of right. The Shakti writes: India has experience of many a commission and committee since the establishment of the British rule. Lakhs and crores of rupees out of the Indian exchequer have been wasted over these commissions and yet our subjection remains intact. We have repeatedly asserted that political rights cannot be had for the mere begging, they have to be wrested. Indians should not therefore build false hopes on Great Britain, but should devote their attention to things nearer home. The Aj disagrees with the view of the Leader that the non-cooperation movement has been a failure and that the Indians had better revert to "constitutional agitation" and urges that in view of the repeated failure and ineffectiveness of "constitutional agitation" for the last fifty years and in view of the fact that non-cooperation has created unparalleled political consciousness among the people, a new national programme based on non-cooperation but different from the older one should be formulated. In the course of a series of articles discussing the position of Muslims with regard to the Reforms the Medina says: The times are most critical for Muslims. Owing to their special position Indian Muslims are not only the objects of the enmity and prejudice of other Indian communities, but owing to their political importance and their previous connexion with Islamic brotherhood they are also the adversaries of British imperialism itself as a result of which British statesmen have become enemies of the Islamic world. The Muslims are thus between the devil and the deep sea. Moreover, the present reforms were based on the Congress scheme. The next instalment will also be based on the principles laid down by the Congress which has now come under the control of Malaviya & Co. In these circumstances how can a scheme prepared by non-Muslims fulfil the requirements of Muslims and remove their grievances? The Muslims should, therefore, gather together for the sake of God, the Prophet, the Quran, and the Ka'aba and chalk out their line of action.

The Muharram.

Hindu papers while expressing gratification at the release of the Arya Samajists arrested in the Arya Samaj temple at Bareilly, urge the Government to make a thorough inquiry into the charges against the police of siding with the Muslims and removing the sacred threads of the Arya Samajists. Muslim papers hold the Hindus responsible for the riot and strongly urge the release of the Muslim accused also. The Shakti remarks: The Bareilly police has brought discredit upon the Government by siding with the aggressors. A thorough inquiry should be made into the matter and such of the officials as are found guilty should be punished. Communal disturbances are increasing on account of the partiality of the Government towards its officials and the Muslims in these matters. The Arya Mitra remarks: A perusal of Swami Ramanand's statement regarding the Bareilly riot makes it clear that the tahsildar and the police acted wrongly in ascending the Arya Samaj altar with shoes on, and that this has grieved not only the Hindus of Bareilly, but the entire Hindu population in the country. But this action pales into insignificance before the black deed of the police in making a despicable attempt to remove sacred threads from the necks of the Arya Samajists who were arrested by them. Can there be a greater proof of the vile mentality of officials blinded by partiality? We want that the Government should act impartially in communal matters and that it should appoint as early as possible an impartial commission to enquire into the Bareilly riot. If a full and thorough inquiry is not made into this matter, as also into the murder of Bhairo Singh and Badri Shah, the consequences will be disastrous. Al Khalil expresses surprise that the Collector of Bareilly has in spite of unmistakable events failed to fix the responsibility for the riots which were caused by the insistence of the Aryas on music during the passage of the Muharram procession and by the throwing of stones from roofs adjoining the Arya Samaj building. It is still more amazing that while the Aryas who were at the bottom of the trouble were let off, no announcement was made regarding the Muslim accused. Justice demands that the accused of both communities should either be released together or tried together.

Political propaganda.

The Desh Bhagat gives prominence to the prediction of a Muslim astrologer of Meerut that Britain will be involved in a bloody war in 1929 and says: It is possible that the prediction of the astrologer may prove correct as it appears from circumstances that Britain will have to face a bloody war in 1929 or up to 1929, and as a result of this war, India may be completely freed from the British grip. In another issue the paper says that there is unrest in all parts of the world over which the English rule or in which they are interested. The civil war in China is all due to British intrigue. Indians know full well to what oppressions their countrymen are subjected merely for uttering the name of liberty, though British statesmen are never successful in securing peace. Ireland also is a long-suffering victim to this British policy of maintaining peace and order. In spite of ruthless repression that land is still a stranger to peace and order. The Republicans are, as is natural, now taking to violence as is shown by the murders of the members of the Irish Government after the recent elections and though the Irish Republican Party has denied responsibility for the murders, the Free State is at the instance of the British statesmen initiating a reign of terror and is passing a law to facilitate action against republicans. But it is certain that Republicanism cannot be killed and it is a pity that thousands of brave Irish lives will be sacrificed at the altar of misguided British selfishness. British statesmen will gain nothing by this, but only increase the odium in which their race is held by all nations of the world and add to their desire to annihilate it. It is a blessing that there is a party in England which is opposed to these injustices and Indians who want their own freedom and also sympathise with other oppressed races anxiously await the day when this just and God-fearing party will supervene and will take the reins of government from these capitalistic murderers and there will be peace in the world. The Parivartan, Hamdam and Hindustani publish a translation of an appeal issued by Munshi Singh, Secretary, Hindustan Ghadr Party, to the Chinese people which appeared in a recent issue of the Forward (Calcutta).

The Rangila Rasul.

Maulana Shabir Ahmed Usmani Deobandi, writing in the Najat, recalls an anecdote of the Caliph, Haroun-al-Raschid, who when he suggested to Imam Malik whipping as a punishment for revilers of the Prophet was angrily told in reply that it was no good for his followers to live after hearing abuse of the Prophet and says that these words are so impressive and so full of regard for the honour of religion that one visualises Imam Malik holding the profanity of Rajpal in his hand and addressing Indian Muslims in these terms. Articles on this subject should in future adopt these words as their title. The Hindustani regrets that the Muslims instead of venting their spleen on the authors of scurrilous pamphlets have become so wild in their indignation that they are recklessly talking of anti-Hindu feeling spreading to Afghanistan, Persia, etc., and the innocent Hindus of the Frontier have already been deprived of their homes and belongings. Instead of enlisting volunteers by thousands and fomenting an anti-Hindu agitation on a huge scale, and thus playing into the hands of a third party, the British, Muslims should confine their efforts to the securing of an amendment of the law to penalize all gross attacks on founders of religions. Muslims should bear in mind that the British are the friends of no community and they will have to rue their present behaviour when the time comes for the British to use the Hindus against them.

Secretariat appointments.

In the course of a note welcoming the appointment of Kunwar Jagdish Prasad as Chief Secretary and eulogising his capacity and character and past record, the Rahnuma recalls that it was his uncle, Raja Permanand, alone who in spite of the unanimous opposition of the Hindu members supported the Muslim demand for representation according to the Congress-League compromise during the debate on the District Board Bill. It is to be hoped that by confirming him in the post Government will remove from itself the slur that it does not favour the promotion of Indians to high offices specially in the Secretariat. If unlike Sir Atul Chatterjee, Kunwar Saheb is allowed to stay at his post he is sure to prove a great help both to Government and to the people. Al Aziz writes: There are only, two Muslims in the United Provinces Executive Council (sic), i.e., the Hon'ble Nawab Ahmad Sa'id Khan and the Hon'ble Nawab Muhammad Yusuf. For the rest there is nothing else but God's name. The President, Deputy President and other Ministers are none of them Muslims. When the present Home Member was appointed there was a regular upheaval in the Hindu press. But this time when these appointments were made and no post went to a Muslim the Muslim press was not even informed. Muslims naturally expect that Government would consider their claims in cases of offices which are not filled by election as in case of elective offices Muslims can never expect that Hindus would be so generous as to accelerate progress by voting for Muslim candidates.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina writes: Muslim rights are being badly ignored in the Ballia district. In the Department of Education there is practically Hindu raj and Muslims are being deliberately debarred from education and educational facilities. Our correspondent says that while the number of Hindu teachers is 300 that of Muslim teachers is only 17. Such being the dearth of Muslim teachers there is no cause for our correspondent to wonder if Muslim students are refused admission in schools and are forced to read Nagri instead of Urdu. If what our correspondent writes is true will not the silence of the Government and its failure to redress the wrong be attributed to its desire to join hands with the Hindus in keeping the Muslims backward in education and the race of life? The paper reproduces a report from the Lebanonese journals to the effect that the British are still detaining 20,000 Turkish war prisoners at Singapore. It discredits the contradiction of this report issued by the British Consul at Beirut and publishes the statement of a discharged prisoner and an extract from Al Jamai Arabia to show that a large number of prisoners are detained for the construction of the naval base at Singapore and are subjected to severe hardships. They are made to work all the night and blinded by means of some drug during the day to prevent their escape. When they become unfit to work they are stranded on the coast of the Persian Gulf where many of them perish on account of starvation.

United Provinces Police.

Referring to the Leader's article on Muslim preponderance in the United Provinces Police the Aligarh Mail writes: Those who make such a complaint dissemble the fact that the top services of Government are manned by members of their community out of all proportion to their numerical strength. The Leader easily forgets how the offices of the Government of India are monopolized by Bengali Hindus and how in an overwhelming number Hindus are employed in the United Provinces Secretariat. If the Muslims have been given the chance of policing a little more than other people in the two provinces the reason must be sought not in any special favour to the Muslims by the Government, but in the aptitude of the Muslims for police work. The Sadai Muslim resents the proposal of the Leader about the dismissal (sic) of Muslims from the Police department of these provinces in which they are over-represented and inquires how it would relish a proposal to dismiss Hindus from other departments in which the Muslims are under-represented. It asks Muslim publicists to bring to light all cases in which Muslims are under-represented in any service and urges the United Provinces Government to bring Muslim representation in all such departments to its legitimate level at the earliest opportunity.

The Bengal detenus.

While expressing gratification at the release of Mr. S. C. Mitra, newspapers vehemently protest against the indefinite detention of other men. The Leader writes: It is a scandal of the first magnitude that the Bengal Government should have travelled so far away from the reign of law in the direction of a reign of discretion as to keep in confinement for an indefinite period a number of men against whom they have not the courage to proceed in a court of law. The episode illustrates in a very practical form the extent to which a freedom-loving people would be prepared to go against all the canons of freedom when they hold an Empire and keep a people in subjection. It should be needless to add that no people can have full confidence in a Government so conducted.

"Corruption in Government service."

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: We would like to know what the Government propose to do to mitigate the evil of corruption in the subordinate ranks of public servants which appears to grow and flourish under the very eyes of Government without any serious attempt at its eradication. In no other province of India has it attained such colossal proportions as in our province. But while remedial measures have been taken in other parts and have succeeded to an appreciable extent in mitigating it, nothing has been done in our province to arrest its progress. The most crying need is the protection of the litigant public, who are mostly ignorant villagers, from the illegal demands made on their pockets in the name of haq. Will the Government of Sir William Marris give their attention to it and take steps to eradicate this scandalous system of tipping.

Indian States.

The Desh Bhagat says that it was owing to the intrigues of the Maharaja of Patiala that the Maharaja of Nabha lost his gaddi and as the editor of the Riyasat was freely exposing the conspiracies of the ruler of Patiala, that enraged chief at first gave proof of his mean-heartedness by forbidding the entry of the paper into his territory and has now attempted to fulfil his long-cherished desire of arresting and harrassing the editor. Every independent-minded Indian will regard with scorn this foolish and contemptible act of the Patiala State in arresting a man on a false and baseless charge. If the State persists in pressing this futile charge it will further lower itself in the eyes of Indians.

The Nagpur satyagraha.

The Aj holds satyagraha against the Arms Act to be morally justifiable and not opposed to the principle of non-violence, despite Mahatma Gandhi's view to the contrary. It congratulates the citizens of Nagpur on their courage in resuming the satyagraha against the Arms Act, but declares that their action is premature, and not likely to be attended with success, for the country is not prepared to start similar movements in other places in sympathy with them.

The Risala Vartman case.

Muslim papers, while generally welcoming the judgement in the Risala Vartman case, continue to press for specific legislation penalizing attacks on founders of religions. Hindu papers regard the sentences as unduly severe and as a concession to Muslim agitation. They also urge immediate action against certain Muslim publications attacking Hindu deities and incarnations. The Aligarh Mail writes:—The Muslim community must be really indebted to Sir Malcolm Hailey for having got the Vartman case decided so expeditiously. It behoves the Punjab Muslims to do nothing that may embarrass His Excellency in the task of administration. We should also scrupulously desist from wounding Hindu sentiments in any way. In another article in the same issue the paper writes:—Considering the gravity of the crime the sentences are not severe. We feel Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh's discomfiture is complete. The judgement of Justices Broadway and Skemp is, in fact, in a sense a severe stricture on, and an indirect condemnation of, his knowledge and understanding of law. If he believes, as we do, that the use of discretion is never a belated act, he must now resign if he has not done so already. That is the most honourable course which we would advise Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh to adopt if he does not want to face further embarrassments resulting from the demand which the Punjab Muslims may put forward before the Secretary of State and Government that Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh, who has forfeited the confidence of a major portion of the population of the province to whom he has to administer justice, should not be made a permanent judge of the Lahore High Court. We are afraid this must be the next modest demand of the Punjab Muslims if Mr. Justice Kunwar Dalip Singh does not resign or cannot be made to resign. The Aj holds that the Punjab High Court was in the wrong in convicting the writer of the article Sair-i-dozakh in Risala Vartman and its publisher under section 153A. It contends that this section provides punishment only for those who create or seek to create hatred between communities. The High Court has not shown how the writer of the article has created hatred between Hindus and Muslims. It is a different matter if he has created hatred amongst Muslims against an individual, i.e., himself. The Pratap writes:—If the Muslim demand for an amendment of section 153A is conceded it will result in more harm than good. A handful of men will found a creed of their own and their preceptor will be beyond the pale of criticism. It will also hamper intellectual awakening. The Anand remarks:—It is, indeed, strange that while the Government is so sensitive about attacks on the Prophet it views with indifference the dissemination of literature by Muslim agencies containing scurrilous attacks upon the religious heads of the Hindus. Hundreds of books have been written against Lords Krishna, Ram Chandra, and other Hindu deities, but neither has any one of them been proscribed by Government nor have the writers thereof been prosecuted. Is this justice? Is the law meant to prevent attacks upon the Islamic Prophet only and not upon other founders of religion? After the sentence passed on the author of the Risala Vartman it is incumbent upon the Government to take action against Muslims guilty of similar offences. We hope that the Government will act prudently and justly and thereby remove the dissatisfaction that now prevails among the Hindus. The Kailash writes:—The Government took no action against the Unniswin sadi ka Maharshi, a book published by an Ahmadia of Qadian, but it prosecuted the publisher of the Rangila Rasul which was written in reply to it. It also took no action in connexion with the inflammatory article entitled "From Delhi to the next world," but when the Trip to Hell was published in reply to it it promptly arrested the Hindus responsible for its publication and sent them to jail. The High Court did what it thought proper. That court and its conscience alone know what it did, but the Government ought to understand well that this sort of crooked diplomacy is not desirable. The Muslims are adepts in spreading excitement, while the greatest drawback of the Hindus is that they are disorganized. This is why twenty-four crores of Hindus are always at a disadvantage against seven crores of Muslims. If the Hindus follow the same policy they can shake not only the Government, but the whole world. Arya Samajist and Sanatanist Hindus, if you want to take anything from the Government commence organizing yourselves. If the Muslims are boycotting you you should also become men of action and by boycotting them impress upon their minds that India belongs to the Hindus and they cannot be boycotted. The Medina says:—The judgement has, no doubt, restored the dignity of law which Mr. Justice Dalip Singh had sought to bury, but the question is if it has assuaged the sentiments of Muslims and met their demands. Reports from Lahore show that the judgement has satisfied neither the extremists nor the moderates and for the following reasons:—(1) It provides no punishment for Rajpal who continues to pass his criminal life in perfect freedom. (2) It has not suggested any means of stopping the mischief the seeds of which were sown by Mr. Justice Dalip Singh, nor has it reversed his foolish judgement. (3) The most pressing demand of Muslims was for the enactment of a new measure penalizing attacks on founders of religions, but this judgement closes the door against any fresh legislation of the kind. (4) The sentences are inadequate. (5) The judgement does not provide any balm for the wounds inflicted on the hearts of Muslims by the imprisonment of the editors of the Muslim Outlook and the Zamindar and others. Muslims should, therefore, devise means for meeting such attitude and expedients of the Government. Al Khalil says that, though the Vartman judgement shows that insults to prophets and religious heads are punishable under section 153A, and that Mr. Justice Dalip Singh had wrongly judged its purview still, lest another Justice Dalip Singh might in future again regard its purview as too limited, a section should be added to the Penal Code expressly penalising insults to prophets and religious heads. Mr. Justice Dalip Singh's verdict, however well-intentioned, is wrong as it differs from a ruling of a sister High Court and a Bench ruling of his own High Court in similar cases. Proceedings should, therefore, be started again against Rajpal as there can be no appeal in the case to the Privy Council. Muslims will not be satisfied until the traducers of their faith and its leaders are adequately punished. The Haq says that while the judgement has established the comprehensiveness of the law and will act to a certain extent as a deterrent for foul-mouthed writers in future it has dwelt only upon contempt and hatred and in view of the present vitiated atmosphere a law penalizing vile attacks on religious personages as such is needed. It is hoped that Hindus also will support this demand and if fresh legislation is not resorted to by Government it should at least add whipping to the punishments of fine and imprisonment already provided in section 153A.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers remain greatly agitated over the reports of outrages on Hindus in the Frontier and complain bitterly of Government's "indifference and remissness" in the matter. The Leader writes:—There is little doubt that the action of the Afridis in tribal territory in driving out, bag and baggage, the Hindus and Sikhs who had been settled amongst them for centuries, and with whom they had been living on most friendly terms, is the result of the venomous anti-Hindu propaganda carried on among them by Muslim firebrands from British territory. That such a general expulsion of the Hindus should have been effected under the very nose of British officers is one of the most astounding features of the situation. Will the Government care to make a sifting inquiry to find out the brains who inspired the outrage and punish those who have shown themselves capable of setting in train in the most irresponsible and criminal manner forces of fanaticism which have reduced innocent Hindus and Sikhs to a pitiable position and entailed enormous loss and suffering on them. Why have they not so far issued any communiqué authoritatively informing the public of the state of affairs and of the steps they have taken or propose to take to restore the exiles to their hearths and homes and to afford protection? The Abhyudaya strongly condemns Muslim "rowdyism" in connexion with the Rangila Rasul agitation as displayed in the expulsion of Hindus from the Frontier territory and says:—Now this agitation has assumed such proportions that no country or Government which boasts of being civilized should tolerate it. It becomes only a wild and savage people and we can call it at best the Nadirshahi of the twentieth century. In view of the bravery evinced by Shikhandi and Malik Kafur (eunuch generals) we hesitate to call the Government under whose administration all this is being done as even impotent. This terrible injustice and oppression is being perpetrated on our brethren in the Frontier province which is ruled by the brave British, the sole champions of justice and civilization and our heavenly trustees and guardians who do not leave our country for fear lest India should be plunged into a civil war as soon as they boarded the ship. What can we infer from this attitude of the Government? Is it afraid of the Frontier Muslims? This cannot be the case. The Government moved heaven and earth in connexion with the abduction of an English girl, Miss Ellis. But that was the question of the protection of the honour of a white woman. British fleet is immediately despatched to China and Egypt on the least trouble arising there. But the Government's laxity and remissness on this occasion is amazing and disgraceful. We do not see what right such a Government has to rule over us. We strongly urge the Government to take adequate measures for the protection of the Hindus. It ought to bear in mind that if it does not suppress this agitation at once it would be its turn to face such troubles after the Hindus. The Surya also writes to a similar effect. The Kailash remarks :—We are surprised at the aggressive mentality of the Muslims and the policy of reticence adopted by the Government. Atrocities are perpetrated in broad daylight upon the Hindus who form 24 crores of the Indian population and to whom India belongs and yet the Government remains unmoved. The only policy that can be successfully adopted against these wild tribes of the Frontier is to return stones for bricks. We cannot help suggesting to the Government that if the Frontier province is under its rule it should protect its Hindu subjects, station Hindu soldiers there, and see to it that Hindus form 99 per cent. of the local police. Referring to the protest meetings of the Hindus against Muslim aggression the Anand says that there is serious discontent among the Hindus against the Government, and they have begun to think that it is unable to protect them. If the Government allows the Muslim aggressors to get emboldened the spirit of retaliation will take hold of the peace-loving Hindus and the country will be plunged into chaos and anarchy. We appeal to His Excellency Lord Irwin to consider the situation impartially, to protect the just rights of the Hindus and to make efforts to put a stop to the atrocities that are being perpetrated on them. Referring to the expulsion of Hindus from the tribal territory the Krishna says that so long as the Hindus also do not adopt the policy of tit for tat and the Hindu majority also does not mete out similar treatment to the Muslims in places where they are in a majority the Frontier tribes and other Muslims of their way of thinking will not be brought to their senses. Bhai Parmanand used to say very rightly that unity would come of itself if the Hindus of Bihar, United Provinces, and other Hindu provinces were to treat the Muslims in the same way as the Muslims of Bengal and the Punjab had treated the Hindus. Hindus should now give up kindheartedness and toleration and should adopt the policy of tit for tat for self-preservation. The Vartman takes Hindu young men severely to task for keeping quiet in spite of the fact that "their mothers are being ground down in the mill-stone of atrocities" and says :—Those whose blood does not boil at the sight of their mothers and sisters being dishonoured are dead. Young men possess power enough to shake the world. It is the young men of Russia and China who are moving the world. Had our young men known their own power they would not have proved such cowards. It is our dead young men who are responsible for the terrible fall of the Hindu community. We still believe that all evils will disappear in a trice if even a lakh of our intoxicated young men, carrying their heads in the hollow of their hands, come forward to serve their community. The Bir Hindu publishes an article by Lala Ram Prasad, B.A., in which he says that newspapers fan communal hatred only by publishing proceedings of violent meetings and commenting on them. If Government is really serious about putting down trouble it should lay down that mosques should be strictly reserved for worship and should not be used for holding objectionable meetings and collecting men and material for riots. The Krishna supports the demand of Mr. Varma of the Central Provinces for the stoppage of cow-killing on the occasion of Bakr-Id and says that it is amazing that an animal held so sacred by Hindus is killed in a Hindu country. Muslim emperors did not dare to kill cows in India and had forbidden cow-slaughter. It is time Hindus girded up their loins to uphold their religious rights.

Political propaganda.

The Desh Bhagat says that the British capitalists, owing to their guilty conscience, see their downfall in the progress and rise of America, Japan, Germany, Turkey, Russia, Afghanistan, Persia, France, China, Nepal, and India. This dread of the prosperity of others is due to the fact that British capitalists are really responsible for the ruin of the world. British statesmen are mortally afraid of the Bolshevik bogey. The Arcos House search has, according to the New Statesman, only revealed a secret book of the British Government containing instructions for suppressing any Indian revolt. The discovery of this book in Acros House shows how the Bolsheviks love India and what they dare to save her. A number of circumstances go to show that they are very soon going to take practical steps to free India also like China, and it is because of this that the British capitalists and their supporters paint the Bolsheviks in diabolical characters in India. Indians should discriminate between their friends and foes and should never be influenced by anti-Bolshevik propaganda. The same paper has another article under the caption "The Last Breath of the English Government in India," by Lala Bishambhar Sahay Premi, M A., in which he says that the East India Company left no stone unturned to crush India and to make her inhabitants weak, cowardly, and poor. Indians unable to bear its oppression rose for their freedom in 1857 and the English were expelled from many parts of India. There was little left for the uprooting of British rule, but traitors sided with this Nadirshahi Government and re-established it and injured their own cause. Untold atrocities were perpetrated on Indians in 1858 and they were deprived of their army. The Queen's Proclamation followed, and simple-minded Indians were taken in by its smooth syllables, but all modern improvements were introduced into India not for the benefit of Indians, but to promote the mobility of troops and thus to crush Indians if they ever dreamed of freedom. Raw materials were freely exported causing famines. Epidemics began to decimate the country, trade declined, and ghi and milk became scarce for ever. Indians should know that aeroplanes will now be introduced in India with the same object of suppressing freedom. It was said that all military measures were meant to protect India from internal and external enemies, and this belief was gaining ground, but recent events have proved an eye-opener. The way in which Government has failed to protect life and property of late has totally dispelled all illusion. When there is no peace and order in the country Government should be regarded as breathing its last and making room for danda raj (rule of the rod). However, if this Government has proved bankrupt and its guns and shells have all proved unavailing we should rise and stand on our own legs. How long can this Government stand by you? Its cup of empire is now brimming over. This Government which you regard as your physician is itself suffering from a fatal malady and is about to die.

Sir Sankaran Nair's address.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We must confess to a feeling of disappointment in Sir C. Sankaran Nair's address at the Hindu Sabha meeting at Nagpur. He appears to have been led away by his environments and gave utterance to views which would fit in the mouth of our great Sangathanist, Dr. Moonje, and do not look very well coming from a great national leader of the type of Sir Sankaran Nair. The time for mutual recriminations has gone. The abuse of Muslims or of great well-meaning national leaders would not serve to lead us to a solution of the problem. It would only heighten mistrust and ill-feeling and lead us to nothing but wider separation and riots. The Medina vehemently protests against certain passages in Sir Sankaran Nair's address and contends that it is the Hindus who are responsible for the failure of the non-co-operation movement and the subsequent communal tension culminating in riots. It says:—The most dangerous movements inaugurated by the Hindus were Shuddhi and Sangathan. The object of Sangathan was to level gross and unjust charges against Muslims and to array the stalwarts of Mahabir Dals against them so as to compel them to emigrate to other countries or to remain slaves of these wearers of loin-cloth over whom the fortunate forefathers of Muslims had ruled for a thousand years. This is the real object of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements. It is really a political movement aimed against all Muslims so that under British ægis Hindus may pass their lives in ease and comfort and continue to suck the innocent blood of Muslims. Hindus who were inspired by such ideas found an excuse in the Malabar affair. The Government, too, in pursuance of its crooked diplomacy, was preparing poisonous ground and raising the Hindu-Muslim question which serves as its shield. It could never tolerate the spirit of unity between Hindus and Muslims. The Hindus and the Government, therefore, joined hands to carry on propaganda in connexion with the Malabar affair. Mischievous Arya Samajists were called from the Punjab, and through them propaganda was carried on in Northern India which led to the inauguration of the Shuddhi and Sangathan movements. Hindu papers and platforms began to resound with the cry that Muslims were oppressors, that they demolished temples and killed Hindus. In short feelings of enmity, hatred and bigotry were instilled into the minds of Hindus and Mahabir Dals were arrayed against Muslims.

"Mother India."

Miss Mayo's book, entitled "Mother India," has evoked strong resentment in the Indian press, and its publication is regarded as a propaganda to prejudice the case for further instalments of Reforms. The Leader quotes a number of passages from the book and remarks:—A book which contains such gross misrepresentation of Hindu culture and character, which abounds in mischievous and untruthful generalizations and which presents such a repulsive and revolting picture of Hindu social institutions and religion, cannot but arouse strong indignation among those whose civilization has been thus libelled. The Indian Daily Telegraph characterizes the book as outrageous and says:—Libelling a nation is no congenial task except to degraded specimens of humanity which, like the poisonous snakes, God in his inscrutable wisdom has sent down to this world. To this species belongs the daughter of Eve who hails from America. The Pratap gives a list of social evils obtaining in Europe and America to show that the West is much more morally depraved and says:—It should be borne in mind that selfish, cruel and depraved traffickers in girls who subsist on the wages of sin are to be found in large numbers in Miss Mayo's New York city. Our sense of self-respect demands that we should tell such poison-spitting lasses that they should first look to their own brothels, balconies, the Picadilly revelries, Hyde Park indecencies, the tricks of white slave traffickers, the evil passions of the rich and the propensities of the princes and princesses and then cast their look towards India. The Oudh Akhbar urges Indians to organize a widespread agitation against the book containing the vilest slanders on their national character and to demand legal action against the author.

The Bettiah riot.

The Bettiah riot has received prominent attention and is being commented upon on communal lines. The Leader writes:—The Bettiah riot is another of those tragic communal occurrences which have resulted from Muslim intolerance in the matter of music before mosques. It is clear from the communiqué issued by the Bihar Government that the Muslims were the aggressors. At numerous places by threats of violence and resort to violence they have been interfering with the religious and social celebrations of the Hindus. And in many places district officers have either prohibited Hindu processions under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, or imposed humiliating restrictions which have led to their abandonment. This has had the effect of encouraging the lawless and penalising the law-abiding. If the suppression of legitimate Hindu rights, which involve no infringement of the rights of citizenship of others, continues in deference to the unreasonable demands of those who have been resorting to direct action and defying law and authority, this dissatisfaction may assume inconvenient proportions. The Aligarh Mail writes:—The cause of the riot was the same old Sangathanist insistence on playing annoying music before mosques and Muslims have fared worse. The zealots of Mahabir Dal deliberately planned mischief and thus disturbed the peace of poor Bettiah, Referring to the loss of Muslim lives in the riot the Medina says:—This is the second event after the Kulkatti affair which has been written in British history with the innocent blood of Muslims. But it seems that in this case also the Hindu accused will be released for the Frontier Hindus are being avenged on the Muslims of Bihar and Bengal. How cheap has Muslim blood become during the just régime of the British! The Haqiqat characterises the riot as a fresh instance of the mischievous effects of sangathan, and says that the deliberate diversion of the Mahabir procession from the stipulated route into a predominantly Muslim quarter was clearly meant to cause provocation. We have never supported the Muslim demand that Hindu processions with music should not pass before mosques even at times when prayers are not being said, but the action of the Bettiah Hindus was clearly provocative. All congratulations to Malaviyaji, Lalaji, and Moonje that their sangathan is achieving the desired success as is shown by the tales of Hindu highhandedness received from Bettiah.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The agitation in the Hindu press for action against certain Muslim publications attacking Hindu deities and incarnations is growing in volume and strength. The Digdarshan wonders how it is that though Muslims make most scurrilous attacks on Hindu gods and religious personalities, no action is taken against them, while if Hindus publish rejoinders to them, they are severely dealt with, and why the Government favours the Muslims so much. Is it because it is afraid of their indiscriminate agitation? Perhaps it is for this reason that they are getting emboldened day by day and do not care the least for the Hindus. We want to tell the Government that if it punishes only Hindu editors and publishers and takes no action against offending Muslim writers who defame Shivaji, mother Sita and Swami Dayanand, Hindus will lose faith in its administration of justice. The Anand says that the news that the conviction of the accused in the Risala Vartman case has allayed the indignation of the Frontier Muslims shows that the Government's policy in this connexion was based on conciliating the Muslims and it had nothing to do with dealing out justice to the Hindus. It has been clearly stated on behalf of the Punjab Government that action was not taken against the articles entitled The Maharshi of the 19th Century and From Delhi to the Other World because they did not cause any stir among the Hindus. This means that the law is administered in accordance with the amount of excitement. Is this not a murder of justice? Should justice not be done to the law-abiding and sober people and on the contrary should the demands of only those men be conceded who violate law and hold out threats of violence? The Bharat Dharma reproduces an article from the Hindu Sarvaswa showing how in Radde Hindu published by Fakhrul Mataba Press, Lucknow, in 1913, in Tuhfatul Hind maya Katha Saloi written by Muhammad Abdullah and printed at the Hindustani Press, Lucknow, and in Tegh-i-Faqir bar gardan-i-Faqir written by Maulvi Muhammad Husain most obscene, provocative and scurrilous attacks have been levelled against Hindu gods and incarnations and how equally objectionable matter is to be found in Talqin-i-Mazhab of Aziz Ahmad Fatehpuri, Arya Dharma of Qadiani and Niyog ka bhog of Ali Khan, and urges Hindus not to ignore these publications but to adopt all legitimate means to get them proscribed and their authors and publishers prosecuted. In the course of an article under the heading "Fanatic Muslims and inebriated Bureaucracy" the Sainik writes: The fanaticism of Muslim is increasing day by day. So far we used to hear only of kidnapping of boys, girls and women, but now reports of murders of Arya Samajists are also received from time to time. Four or five murders have been committed within six or seven months. Being incited by Mullahs, Maulvis and mischievous and selfish leaders, fanatic Muslims are perpetrating diabolical deeds, and the inebriated bureaucracy is gloating over all this. Today before the highest tribunal—the bar of public opinion—we prefer this charge against the bureaucracy that by doing several things which it ought not to have done and by not doing several things which it ought to have done, it has, in a way, fostered Muslim fanaticism. It has fanned the flame of Hindu-Muslim enmity. In the United Provinces, there is practically Muslim raj owing to Police raj. There is Muslim ascendency in the Police. Nawab Chattari is the chief of the Police department. There is no wonder if such predominance of Muslims in the police of our province has given rise to various kinds of doubts and apprehensions in the minds of Hindus. They have become so suspicious that they believe that a number of Muslim police officials connive at cases of abduction of Hindu women by Muslims and other cases of the kind. As a result of such things, the belief is gaining strength among Hindus that the inebriate bureaucracy does not make earnest efforts to stop the tyrannies perpetrated on them by Muslims and that, on the other hand, it murders Hindu rights by throwing obstructions in the celebration of Ramlila at Allahabad and by other acts of the kind. This belief of theirs is growing on account of the naked dance of police lawlessness at Bareilly. They think that they are being ground down between the mill-stones of fanatic Muslims and the inebriated bureaucracy. We want to give timely warning to the fanatic Muslims and the inebriated bureaucracy that they should not stir this sleeping volcano. The day the Hindu community realizes that the honour and religion of Hindus are in danger it will take no time in producing Shivaji, Pratap and Guru Govind Singh. The Krishna appeals to Mr. Gandhi to lead the Sangathan movement in view of the bold challenge thrown out by the frontier tribes. He should take up the bow of Hindu Sangathan and do what Ram Das, Shivaji and Guru Govind Singh have done. The frontier tribes should bear in mind that their actions would force the Hindus to mete out similar treatment to the Muslims in their midst. Hindus form seven per cent. of the Frontier population but there are places in India in which Muslims form only four per cent. of the population. They should ponder how the Muslims would fare in such places. The times of Hari Singh Nalwa are too recent to be forgotten. How then do they dare to crush the descendants of Nalwa? Government also is indirectly responsible for all this mischief as it can easily put a stop to all trouble by adopting a firm attitude. If it fails to help Hindus today, they also will be forced to withdraw their co-operation another day. Hindus in their turn should trust only to themselves. They number twenty-two crores. Even a crore of determined men among them can plant the banner of their superiority and domination over the world. They should remember the doings of their forbears. They should realise that they are the descendants of lions. They should abandon their present sheep's clothing and don the dress of heroes. They should have the teachings of the Gita in their heart and the bow of Arjun in their hands and then the goddess of freedom and success will be bowing at their feet. The Hamdam complains that the Krishna numbers of the Tej, Milap and Pratap contain editorial articles inciting Hindus to develop militant qualities and to use them against Muslims. An attempt has also been made to work up feeling in connexion with the slaughter of cows and attacks on women in India. When such is the attitude of the responsible editors, the tone of the contributed articles can be easily surmised. In another article the paper regrets that sangathanist propagandists are utilizing the Hindu exodus from tribal territory to fan anti-Muslim feeling and points to the statement of the editor of the Tarjuman-i-Sarhad in which it is asserted that the Hindus were only asked to condemn the action of Rajpal but they preferred to leave the country rather than condemn a co-religionist. Non-sangathanist papers should now give publicity to this true picture of Pathan mentality and should dissociate themselves from the unholy sangathanist propaganda which is inspired by sinister motives. The Medina says that the reports regarding atrocities on Hindus in the tribal territory are altogether unfounded. The Haqiqat complains that Kali Charan Sharma has become bolder in his anti-Muslim attitude after his release and that he recently spoke at Cawnpore in support of Rajpal's book and attacked Muslim leaders.

Political propaganda.

On the occasion of the Janmashtami a number of Hindu papers published impassioned poems and articles invoking Lord Krishna to deliver India from oppression and injustice. In the course of an effusive article invoking Lord Krishna to re-incarnate himself, the Vartman writes: This is the sacred day when you incarnated yourself to destroy Kans. The times are much harder now. Then there was only one Kans, but today a number of Kansas are perpetrating atrocities on the breast of this sacred land. Then Devaki and Vasudeva alone were captives and in trouble, but today innumerable Vasudevas are rotting in the hells of the bureaucracy. Then Brajmandal alone was oppressed, but today the whole of India is crying out for deliverance. The weak are being ground down. Cows are being slaughtered. The pious are being oppressed. The Anand says: O Krishna in the Dwapar age you incarnated yourself and slew Kansa and other demons. Will you not put a stop to the atrocities of the demons who are destroying Hindu religion and Aryan civilization now-a-days. Under the heading "Worship of Revolution" the Vartman publishes a poem invoking the "Lord of Revolution". It says: Let the clouds of revolution come and overcast this forest; let there be an upheavel once in this life. Let the palaces and crowns fall down and the red banner wave. Let the drum of equality beat again; let the song of revolution be sung. Commenting on the conviction of Satindra Nath Sen, the leader of the Patuakhali Satyagraha, the Shakti writes: In the judgement Mr. Viswas praised his character and self-sacrifice and observed that people respected him, but even then he could not dare to acquit him. Such is the hard lot of Indian magistrates. They would either write judgements made to order or resign. The decision of Mr. Justice Dalip Singh alone can be commended in the present political period. The judgement in the Risala Vartman case will be said to be one made to order, as it shows wholesale partiality. It is bad to abuse any religious leader, but at the same time it does not add to the dignity of the law to twist it to punish offenders. Strange is the justice of British Courts. The Aj publishes an article entitled "Obstacle to Indian liberty" in which the writer, Indira Raman Shastri, says that the diplomacy of the bureaucracy is the greatest obstacle to Indian liberty. The alien bureaucracy cannot naturally love this country. It cannot be that it is here for altruistic purposes. The skeletons of the country bear witness to it. Disinterested service implies peace, whereas the disinterested administration of the bureaucracy provokes unrest in the country. So the administration of the bureaucracy in this country can be described only as interested maladministration. It is only for the good of its country and nation. The Indians may well cry themselves hoarse over their oppression, but they will have to be sacrificed for the protection of the interests of the whites. Without diplomacy their ends cannot be served and the bureaucracy therefore has to practise it at every step to maintain itself in this country and to keep Indians at a safe distance from liberty. Referring to persistent and widespread rumours about early hostilities between Britain and Afghanistan, Al-Khalil says that they gain confirmation from the visits of the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief to the Frontier, the recall of the British troops from China and the projected visit of the War Minister to India to inspect—the Frontier and regrets that the consequences of such a war would be disastrous for Indians generally and Muslims specially.

The Kakori dacoity case.

Newspapers are strongly criticizing the Chief Court's judgement in the Kakori dacoity case as being extremely harsh and relentless and are appealing to the Governor to exercise the prerogative of mercy, especially in the case of those who are of tender age. The Indian Daily Telegraph says that the judgement will be received by the public with horror. To see these misguided youths sentenced to capital punishment, even after appealing for mercy, is indeed an instance of justice in all its relentlessness. The Vartman writes: The judgement must have staggered a large number of persons. It is instinct with cruelty and callousness. In this unfortunate country alone it is possible to send four young men to the gallows for a small conspiracy. This leads us to the conclusion that the lives of slaves are not considered to be of much value. The Aj says that there is no kind-hearted man but his heart will be lacerated at the severest punishment being inflicted on so many youths. The accused in this case were treated with undue harshness from the very outset and they were not allowed opportunity to conduct their defence with the help of the best legal advisers. The Anand remarks: Such severe sentences have never been awarded in any conspiracy case and the whole country will be shocked to hear the news. The Haqiqat holds that the Oudh Chief Court has dealt out stern justice and has shown no consideration for the repentance or immature age of the appellants. It would have been better if justice had been tempered with mercy. As however there is now no chance for a further appeal in a law court, it is to be hoped that Government will at least commute the sentences of the four condemned youths in view of the fact that they were misled under evil influences. Though even the sentence of transportation is tyrannical in political offences, that of death will be simply intolerable for the public and will surely excite popular feeling against Government. We, therefore, hope that His Excellency the Governor will on the eve of his departure from this province show mercy in this case. The Oudh Akhbar says that as the Kakori crime was committed many years ago and as the four condemned prisoners are now repentant and seek mercy His Excellency the Governor should spare their lives as an act of grace and allow them an opportunity to reform themselves. It would not be too much to expect that His Excellency, who is extremely kind-hearted, God-fearing and sensible, would signalize the close of his tenure by commuting their sentences to transportation.

Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

The Pioneer writes: The announcement that the Government intend to introduce legislation with the view of strengthening the law against writings calculated to inflame religious animosity will be received with mixed feelings. Those who are inclined to applaud the Government's action should remember that a measure of this kind is double-edged. The decision bears unpleasant traces of being dictated by what is, it may be hoped, the passing excitement of the moment. The Aj expresses satisfaction at legislation being enacted to penalize the reviling of religion and wounding of religious susceptibilities and says that this shows that even the legal advisers of the Government are of opinion that the view of Justice Dalip Singh regarding the insufficiency of section 153A, I. P. C. to deal with the revilers of founders of religion is correct. It suggests that the new section to be added to the Indian Penal Code should provide that any individual as representative of a community can institute legal proceedings under it and that section 153A should also be amended so as to incorporate a similar provision. This will save the Government from the charge of partiality levelled at it in such matters. While expressing satisfaction with the proposed legislation, the Hamdam says that this permanent evidence of Hindu-Muslim discord would not have disfigured the statute-book if Sangathanists had not thought it their duty to harass Muslims in order to accomplish their aims and had not resorted to revilement of their revered Prophet. The failure of Hindus to condemn blasphemous literature or to welcome the proposed legislation shows that the Aryas still mean to persist in their dirty polemical methods. So long as shuddhi and sangathan are flourishing and the danda baz Dr. Moonje controls the Hindu Maha Sabha, inter-communal amity seems to be practically unattainable.

Dr. Ansari's statement.

The Leader writes: The advice which Dr. Ansari offered and the programme of work he outlined had for its objective the attainment of the important goal of national unity. He wanted to throw open the door of the Congress to all parties and to make it a truly representative organization. But the high idealism which inspired his views and outlook has made no appeal to Mr. Nehru. The Vartman writes: Congress workers should leave all other activities for the present and go to villages to impress upon the villagers that the present system of government is the root of all their troubles and that India is for Indians. If this is done we shall make much progress in the national battle next year. The Oudh Akhbar says that Dr. Ansari has shown conspicuous honesty in publishing his correct diagnosis of the political ills of the country before his election as president of the Congress. It is surprising that the doctor's statement has pained Pandit Motilal Nehru. Dr. Ansari is not a diplomat like Pandit Motilal and has like a practical man placed his cards on the table. It is gratifying that the Doctor does not favour a policy of surrender and has not lost heart though he recognizes that successful opposition to any policy of Government is impracticable in the present vitiated atmosphere. The time will, however, come when this internecine strife will cease and Dr. Ansari should be welcomed as an angel of peace as his prescription is sure to cure the communal canker. We are very hopeful and believe that though Dr. Ansari may not make much of a mark at Madras as a political guide, he is certain to solve the communal question.

Muslim affairs.

Muslim papers have begun to protest against the revilement of the Prophet in the "Book of Knowledge". The Haqiqat reproduces a report from the Taqat (Delhi) of August 16 to the effect that volumes XI and XII of the "Book of Knowledge" of the Standard Literature Co. of Calcutta contain gross attacks on the Prophet and warns the British Government that so long as a single Muslim is alive in the world, he cannot tolerate an insult to his Prophet. Muslims are prepared to sacrifice all for the honour of their faith. The writer who is a Christian has called the Prophet all sorts of names and if Government does not proscribe the publication, anti-Christian feeling will be roused among Muslims and it is not known what consequences may follow. What is still more painful to Muslims is that the book contains the picture of the Prophet. Government should immediately punish its author and publisher. The Rahnuma also urges Government to have these objectionable portions expunged from the book. The Hamdam protests against the continued "exile" of the Moplahs to the Andamans and says that no canon of civilization and humanity can justify this action of Government. It is undoubtedly due to some deep-laid move of Government which time alone can reveal. It is a pity that Muslim leaders are so silent in the matter. Referring to a report that the Government of India is inducing the Nizam to take interest, the Haqiqat wonders why Government is interfering with his religious freedom by asking him to violate the explicit injunctions of the Quran. Both the Nizam and Government should realise that Indian Muslims feel strongly in the matter.

Bettiah riots.

Al Khalil says: Sangathanist propaganda and organized Maha Sabha activity have now brought about such conditions in India that it has become impossible for Muslims to live in peace and comfort in the country. Every morning discloses the sorry tale of the spoliation of the worshippers of one God. After Multan, Lahore and Bareilly, comes the heart-rending news of Bettiah, where the sangathanists and Mahasabhaites attacked the Muslims in broad day-light and within two hours killed about a dozen Muslims and wounded another eighty. They forced their way to the mosque at prayer time and dyed its sacred floor with human blood. Even this did not satiate their thirst for vengeance and a mob numbering twenty or twenty-five thousand invaded Muslim shops and quarter and indulged in an orgy of pillage and arson and murder. We wonder why the police which was present in sufficient strength with this procession did not restrain this blood-thirsty and armed rabble from its work of wanton violence. The action of the Mahabir procession in suddenly leaving the main road and diverging into a lane containing a mosque and an Imambara clearly indicates that the sangathanists were bent on mischief and were simply seeking a pretext to pick up a quarrel. It is the duty of the Government to protect the Muslim minority there from the blood-thirstiness of the inhuman and high-handed sangathanists. The Bettiah officials should also be required to explain why they did not take effective measures to prevent this carnage as if such a state of things continues it would become difficult for Muslims to breathe or remain alive there. To Muslims we would say that they should, while avoiding violence, as far as possible, devote their attention to internal organization, reform and progress. We know that a special section of the Hindus has become so much influenced by the teachings of Moonje, Malaviyaji and Lalaji that it cannot bear to see Muslims even for a moment. The remedy for this lies in the Muslims acting with the greatest caution and circumspection and shunning all fissiparous tendencies and so collecting themselves round a centre that all efforts of the enemies of the faith may fail.

The Risala Vartman case.

The Medina writes: There may be some truth in the rumour that the Viceroy has invited Mr. Justice Broadway to Simla in order to discuss with him the result of the Risala Vartman case, for, considering the demands of Muslims, the sentences passed upon the accused are very light and the real culprit (the author of the Rangila Rasul) who was the cause of all this agitation and unrest among the subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor has not yet got his deserts. Moreover, those innocent persons who were imprisoned merely for upholding the honour of the Prophet have not been released. If it is true that the Viceroy is personally going to consider the Muslim demands, then it is a good augury for the future. We hope that the Government, and especially Lord Irwin, will concede the just demands of Muslims and thereby evince their liberality.

Sir Sankaran Nair's address.

Sir Sankaran Nair's address at the Hindu Sabha meeting at Nagpur has evoked strong resentment in the Muslim Press. Al Khalil says that the provocative sentiments uttered by Sir Sankaran Nair at Nagpur should cause no surprise as Hindu leaders of even the highest standing have in spite of protestations of patriotism never overlooked the special interests of their community. His address opens with a scathing indictment of Muslims and shows them up as the enemy of Indian peace and freedom. He has forgotten Katarpur, Ajodhia and Arrah in his blind accusation against Muslims in connexion with communal conflicts. In fact, these terrible disturbances are due to Sangathanist propaganda. What harm those who shout liberty and pour abuse on peaceful and liberty-loving Muslims have worked to the cause of Indian freedom, will form a forbidding chapter of Indian history. The Sadaqat says that there is much in Sir Sankaran Nair's presidential address to which Muslims must take exception. He has charged both the Government and the Hindu (Congress) leaders with showing persistent partiality towards the Muslims. It is a pity that the address of a leader of such standing was so full of misstatements and that his reasoning was so marred by communal bias.

Dasehra.

The Aj deplores that no settlement was reached between Hindus and Muslims at Allahabad regarding the celebration of Ramlila. It says that the statements of the Muslim representatives at the joint conference show that the question of music is not a religious question but that it has been raised as a result of communal tension. The point at issue is that if Hindus take out the Ramlila procession as in previous years, there would be a riot. In these circumstances, does it not become incumbent upon the local authorities to put down rowdies? Does not the Government exist for the suppression of wrong-doers? It is a proof of the weakness of administration to be cowed down by the threats of rowdies.

United Provinces Police.

The Haqiqat says that the demand of the Leader for enlistment of Hindus in large numbers in the Police department supported by resolutions during the "Bareilly day" celebrations is a new mischief and that if it were met by the Muslims celebrating a "Bettiah day" when protests would be made against the paucity of Muslims in the Postal, Railway and Telegraph departments, a new cause of quarrel would arise The Hindus are in a minority in Bengal and the Punjab but monopolize all departments there. We stand for justice for all non-Muslim communities but would protest against the number of Muslims being decreased in the Police department in the United Provinces simply because the Hindus are more vocal while the Muslims are silent.

Communal Representation.

The Aligarh Mail complains that out of the fifteen candidates elected to the Senate of the Agra University by the registered graduates, not one is a Muslim and says: What a sad commentary on the practical working of the joint electorates. If the United Provinces Government is not blind to Muslim interests, it must introduce the nationalizing principle of communal representation in all elections of the Allahabad and Agra universities. We call communal representation nationalizing because unlike the communalizing joint representation it secures the just representation of all communities in an elected body.

Reforms.

The Aligarh Mail says that the news that Sir Mohammad Shafi has been selected for membership of the Statutory Commission is most welcome to the Muslim community, but the Muslims would like to have at least two representatives of their community on the Commission.

Viceroy's Speech.

NEWSPAPERS generally acknowledge that the Viceroy's address to the Indian Legislature was marked by transparent earnestness and sincerity and commend the proposal for holding a conference to discuss the present communal tension. Hindu papers emphasize the need of strict impartiality and firmness on the part of the authorities in dealing with communal questions. The Leader writes: The Viceroy in his address spoke as if the entire responsibility for the existing deplorable and disquieting state of affairs rested with the people. We have been of opinion that the people and the Government must alike share the reproach, and that the leaders who have been trying to bring about unity cannot succeed unless the officials everywhere act justly, firmly, and without fear or favour. That a number of them have not been doing so is the painful experience of a large number of Hindus, particularly in the United Provinces. How is it that in so many places they have upheld the indefensible claims of those who have tried to assert them by resort to force or threat of force? Have they thereby raised the prestige of Government or checked the spirit of direct action or inculcated respect for law and order? Is the spirit of the administration in all cases absolutely above suspicion? His Excellency has offered to act as a peacemaker by himself convening a conference of leaders. One great advantage of the decisions, if any, arrived at at such a conference will be that the officials will be under an obligation to enforce them We would suggest that if the proposed conference is convened the Delhi resolutions should form the basis of discussion. In a subsequent issue the paper writes: We are not very sanguine that the decisions arrived at at a conference convened by the Viceroy will achieve wonders or will change the heart of fanatics and reactionaries. But we venture to think that they will carry greater weight with the people and the reactionary officials and will not be altogether barren of results. It does not necessarily involve any humiliation or confession of failure to seek the intervention of the head of the State for those who have consistently held the view that officials more than the people are to blame for the existing deplorable state of communal tension. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: His Excellency Lord Irwin's address is a message full of sympathy, good-will and sound advice and is worthy of the eminence and reputation of His Excellency. We are thankful to His Excellency for the lead which he is giving. His Excellency has come forward to help us like a true friend of the country. His address gives the lie to those who say that it is the divide-and-rule policy of the Government which is responsible for the present tension, and shows that whatever others may feel His Excellency is genuinely and sincerely anxious to unite the country for its march for Swaraj. We will, therefore, make an earnest appeal to the leaders of both the communities to take advantage of His Excellency's offer of mediation in the generous spirit in which it has been made and make a formal representation to Lord Irwin to call a unity conference at Simla and concert measures for communal settlement. The Anand writes: The Viceroy, who is lecturing on peace ought to bestow attention on the news of the Bareilly disturbances. If His Excellency the Viceroy thinks over the matter he will know that peace will not be restored and the hooliganism of the rowdies will go on increasing so long as Government does not protect the religious rights of the law-abiding and peaceful people. If, therefore, His Excellency sincerely wants to purge the country of communalism it is his duty not to allow justice to be murdered for the sake of peace and to suppress the hooligans and firmly protect the just rights of the people. The Haqiqat eulogizes the transparent sincerity of the Viceroy's call for communal concord and says that any Indian patriot would be doing a great service to his country if he gets it widely broadcasted in the vernaculars. His picture of the wanton havoc wrought by these needless riots is truly touching and must affect the hearts of all but self-seeking mischief-makers. His Excellency is right in his apprehension that the prospects of the success of a peace conference are not very hopeful, but that should not be allowed to stand in the way of holding one. No paths should be left unexplored, and the conference should be held at Delhi in October and should consider all disputed matters.

Dr. Ansari's Statement.

Muslim papers so far have supported the views of Dr. Ansari, but the comments in Hindi papers are widely divergent. The Aligarh Mail writes: It is creditable to Dr. Ansari that he has spoken the truth scrupulously, though not too ruthlessly. His suggestions of co-operating within the Cabinets and forming a people's party in the legislatures give us not only a clue to the trend of thought in the staunch No-changers' brains but also reflect that political sanity has dawned on them and that the day is drawing near when they themselves will lead the Opposition on the formation of which Dr. Ansari is so particular. The sooner that day comes the better it is for our political advancement along lines which destiny has chalked out for us. The Sainik says that the fine words and phrases used by Dr. Ansari in his statement have been borrowed from the vocabulary of defeated and down-trodden people and his noble sentiments and ideas are inopportune and impracticable. The whole of his statement appears to be the product of a brain deranged by utter despair. It is an uncalled-for advice to the country to fall prostrate. The Aj says: The best course for Indians to follow would be to keep aloof from Councils altogether and strive to attain liberty. If this be impossible they should no longer dream of Swaraj, but co-operate in a spirit of self-surrender with the bureaucracy with a view to secure minor reforms through its favour. In another issue the paper says: Not only labour but peasantry also requires to be organized. We should study the organization of peasantry in China, and with the necessary changes in accordance with conditions in India should introduce it here. The organization of labour and peasantry can well emancipate this country. If India undertakes this task under the presidency of Dr. Ansari this year it is quite possible that popular enthusiasm may be aroused again as in 1920-21. If we are only for reforms through co-operation, and not for liberty through non-cooperation, the Congress should be abolished. The Siasat supports Dr. Ansari's suggestion that all communities and political parties should be welcomed into the Congress, so that it may become truly national, and that the Khaddar restriction should be removed. The communal question should also be treated as the most important one. The Azad advises the country to accept Dr. Ansari's lead in the matter of fusion of political parties, work in the legislatures and promotion of communal unity. Pandit Motilal Nehru has been tried by the country and should now be replaced. The Medina says that by his statement Dr. Ansari has made his position extremely delicate, and the programme suggested by him may bring disgrace if there is any faltering in its execution. The chief importance of the statement lies in the fact that it exposes the political imposture of our Swarajist friends. If even to-day Pandit Motilal, instead of trying to throw a veil over a patent fact, becomes a co-operator in the true sense then unity within the Congress will be possible. Since non-cooperation has been killed the only course is to accept office and to serve the country after gaining an insight into the inner policy of the Government.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindi papers continue to urge the Government to take measures to trace up the alleged Muslim conspiracy behind the murders of Arya Samaj leaders. The Arya Mitra publishes an article by B. Uma Shankar, M.L.C., who says that when the bureaucracy pats the Muslims it is no wonder if reports of murder and threats of murder are received frequently and the unreasonable demands of the Muslims grow day by day. There have been Muslim Kotwals and Muslim Tahsildars in Bareilly for nearly thirty years. Why did not the bureaucracy post any Hindu Kotwal or Tahsildar when Hindus form 86 per cent. of the population of this Province? All that took place at Bareilly in the presence of an English Collector and Superintendent of Police reminds one of the days of Ghori and Ghazni, but even then they are still there. The same is the case in connexion with Muslim writings and newspapers. Khwaja Hasan Nizami was not arrested even though he wrote a filthy and inflammatory book like the Dai-e-Islam. All the riots and cases of abduction of women, murder, robbery, and forced conversions of people in the name of religion and the creation of ill-feeling among His Majesty's subjects are the outcome of the teachings of the Quran. The Government ought to act courageously like Ibn Saud and Mustafa Kemal Pasha, enquire into the teachings of the Quran and its effects, and proscribe that book. Ridiculing the Hindus for their impotency in the matter of protecting their religious rights, specially those in connexion with the playing of music and taking out processions on religious and social occasions, the Bharat Jiwan writes: If the Muslims so desire they can make the Government tremble with the strength of their lathi and totally annihilate the Hindus of the Frontier, but the Hindus cannot even worship their incarnations. They do not have even so much courage as to say: "Well, we will take out our procession, you can do what you like." When they have not even so much courage, strength in their arms, blood in their veins, and sense of self-respect what are they to do? We shall advise them to conceal their faces in skirts and weep. The Anand contends that the recent reports of murders and threats of murders received from various quarters show that the fanatical Muslims of the country have formed an organization with the object of suppressing the shuddhi and sangathan movements and intimidating and murdering Hindu leaders. It says that if the Government had earnestly made an inquiry into the murder of Swami Shraddhanand the entire mystery would have been exposed then and there. But as the Government's present policy of suppressing the Hindus is gaining strength it shows slackness whenever there is a question of stopping the unjustified actions of the Muslims. This has led to the loss of confidence among the Hindus in the Government's ability to protect them and afforded encouragement to the murderers There is yet time for the Government to uphold the law and extirpate the murderers. The Haqiqat says that the speech of the Hon'ble Nawab Saheb of Chhattari at Jaunpur in July last on Hindu-Muslim unity has been welcomed even by his critics and hopes that he will use his power as a high Government official and his influence as a leading raïs to take practical measures to remove communal tension and will thus leave behind a shining monument of his régime.

Political Propaganda.

In the course of an article, venomously attacking imperialists and capitalists, the Vartman writes: The imperialists have contracted such a taste for the blood of the innocent that their teeth are always covered with blood. The biggest leeches of the world are the imperialists and their supporters. They have sucked and ruined countries after countries and desolated human habitations. They are the cause of all the troubles and worries of the world. They are the greatest sinners on this earth. The Sainik publishes a short history of the "Bomb Party" in which it refers eulogistically to Khudi Ram Bose, Praphulla Chaki, and other members of the conspiracy and says: The courage, deeds, endurance and heroism of these educated youths are unparalleled in the history of the world. In the Bomb Party of Bengal there were such indefatigable heroes of sterling character that had they received proper military training every one of them would have become a Napoleon. Writing in the Desh Bhagat Thakur Sher Singh Shamim Gorwi reproduces an excerpt from a letter of "Raja" Mahendra Pratap from Berlin, in which he complains of his extremely straitened circumstances and appeals to Indians to help this worker in the cause of their country's freedom. Who knows that the "Raja's" efforts might work the salvation of India and Indians should not deny aid to this self-denying servant of theirs.

Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

The Muslim press welcomes the Bill to penalize insult to religions, though some papers want the measure to be made less comprehensive. The Bharat Jiwan says that it would have welcomed the Bill if the Government had enacted it either of its own accord, or at the time when the Muslims had started throwing filth at the religious preceptors of the Hindus, and especially of the Arya Samajists. The enactment of this legislation at the present juncture clearly means that it is due to the fear of the Muslims. Hindus, see and realize. The day you develop sufficient strength to enable you to make as much mischief for the sake of your religion and religious heads as the Muslims are making that very day you will cease to be kicked. The Haqiqat says that in spite of the conviction of the accused in the Risala Vartman case it is clear to every thinking person that section 153A is not wholly adequate to deal with vilifiers of revered prophets as it penalises only the promotion of hatred between different communities and not blasphemy as such. The proposed legislation by Government should be welcomed and Government should be advised to take the help of prominent Hindu, Muslim, and European leaders and law experts in framing it. While admitting that the proposed addition to section 295, Indian Penal Code, will prevent blasphemy, the Hamdam fears that it is so comprehensive that it will also severely hamper legitimate tabligh work and warns Muslims not to accept it unless the offence is made compoundable and bailable and the words " by representations or other visible signs and gestures or any other means " are expunged from the proposed sub-section.

The Kakori Dacoity Case.

The Pratap regards the sentences awarded in the Kakori case as cruelly severe and says :—The Chief Court did not pay the least heed to the appeal of the persons sentenced to death. Except in the case of Manmath sentences were enhanced in every case in which Government desired an enhancement. The offence of the majority of the prisoners was not so serious as it was taken to be, and, even if it was so, some consideration ought to have been shown to their tender age and motive. Mad youths of this type would never have been punished so callously in any free country. The youths who would have vied with Sivaji, Pratap, Kemal Pasha, and Sun-Yat-Sen in valour and patriotism are going to be hanged or forced to rot in jail on account of the present condition of the country. If the Government so desires it has still a chance of saving itself from the charge of cruelty. His Excellency the Governor should exercise his special powers, and at least commute the sentences of the four accused who have been condemned to death. The Sainik says that the cruelty and callousness evinced in the judgement is in keeping with the formidable conspiracy of unfavourable circumstances against this unfortunate country. The learned judges have said that in 1924 there was a dreadful conspiracy against the United Provinces Government. We on our part regard the present system of administration itself as a terrible conspiracy both against the Government of the country and its subjects, and the day appears to be approaching when this conspiracy will be exposed and the conspirators will be arraigned before the highest court of the world—the bar of public opinion. The Bharat Jiwan writes : In view of the harshness shown by the Government to the accused from the very outset, and the notorious success of the Indian Police in fabricating evidence we are constrained to say that extreme severity has been shown in this case. We regard it beneath our self-respect even to pray for mercy, otherwise we would have said that the Governor should at least commute the sentences of death.

The Cawnpore Riot.

The Vartman attributes the Cawnpore riot to the "pro-Muslim policy" of the local authorities and brings serious charges against Muslim constables. It says : At Ram Narayan Bazar the Muslim police continued to encourage Muslims, armed with lathis, to hold their ground. It is not arresting Muslims who are hiding in streets and lanes to perpetrate deadly deeds. After the departure of the Military police the Muslim constables of the Civil police perpetrated much oppression. Innumerable innocent Hindus were sent to the thana. Hindus who were lying in their shops to guard them were arrested. Several Muslim constables snatched lathis from the hands of Hindus and handed them over to Muslims. There is a general complaint among Hindus against the city kotwal and "incharge" kotwal. The Hindus have no confidence in Muslim police officers To keep them at Cawnpore is to keep up unrest. The Aj says that the accounts of the Cawnpore riot and of the murder of a Hindu leader at Pilibhit make it plain that the partiality of the provincial authorities is the cause of all this trouble. For this very reason religious processions of Hindus have been stopped at Allahabad for several years Palpable injustice is done to Hindus in respect of the question of music before mosques. This has encouraged the lawless and fanatical Muslims. Hindu leaders receive threats of murder and are also murdered. There was no cause for a riot at Cawnpore. Rowdies went out of their way to cause a riot, and there was remissness in putting it down with the result that many men were killed and injured. This is the result of communal hatred. So long as this state of things continues, and the bureaucracy, disregarding the rights of citizenship, continues to interfere even with the legitimate functions of the people the fanaticism of one community or the other will continue to increase. The Anand says that the Hindus complain that the Muslim constables took part of their co-religionists very much, incited them, and got the Hindus beaten by them in their presence and afterwards arrested the innocent Hindus.

"Mother India."

The Leader writes : If a tourist is foolish enough to pass judgement and express opinions like those expressed by Miss Mayo, the British Government and the British people should, if they accept that verdict, consider whether such results of British rule in India justify their further presence in the country. If the British people believe that this country with its great past, its civilization and its culture, has sunk to the depths of corruption which Miss Mayo and her admirers in the Press say it has, they should hang down their heads in shame instead of gloating over the failure of their own rule. Do they think British rule has been such a disastrous failure? In the course of an article vehemently criticizing the publication the Vartman says that the book has been published for promoting the cause of British imperialism by showing that India is unfit for self-government. It is not known how old a sinner Britain is. To-day every British child has been possessed by the demon of imperialism. When subject countries prove intractable the British use formidable armies, deadly weapons and poisonous gases, and drop bombs from aeroplanes. What are the poor Britishers to do? Are they not our trustees? Miss Mayo seeks to show that on account of her social and moral evils India is unfit for self-government. But if social progress is the touchstone no country in the world is fit for self-government for in the self-governing nations of the West there is much more immorality, and abortions, thefts, dacoities and murders are more frequent. The women of Western countries are greater victims of diabolical lust than Indian women. The real test of fitness for self-government is an irrepressible desire for freedom. Only that nation can enjoy self-government which considers it sinful to remain under subjection even for a moment and the young men of which are eager to sacrifice their lives.

Dadhkando.

The Leader writes: The change of régime at Allahabad has brought no change of policy in the matter of the question of music before mosques. This is the obvious implication of the evasive reply which the superintendent of police gave to the letter of Mahant Ganga Das in connexion with the organization of the Dadhkando procession. The way in which the authorities in numerous places are bowing to Muslim truculence, which they are unable to crush or control, has led many Hindus to ask whether they are living under the Muslim or the British flag. Last year, without rhyme or reason and without the least provocation, a section of Muslims attacked the Dadhkando procession under the very nose of the authorities. It should have been a point of honour with them to see that this year all the resources of law and order were employed to ensure its peaceful conduct without the imposition of conditions which were not justified by the thoroughly peaceful and orderly conduct of the processionists last year and which are likely to be interpreted as a concession to violence. Instead of strength weakness has been shown which cannot be hidden by the diplomatic language that has been employed. The just grievances of the Hindus, instead of being remedied, have been intensified. The Aj says that there is not a single Hindu in the country but will be grieved at the stoppage of Dadhkando procession at Allahabad owing to the police restrictions regarding music. There is only one remedy for this, namely, non-violent satyagrah, but the "protectors of Hindu interests" fight shy of it. In these circumstances Hindus have no alternative but to stop their festivals and quietly pray to the Almighty for their deliverance in this hour of need.

Muslim Affairs.

The agitation against the "Book of Knowledge" continues in the Muslim press. The Baidar says that the crime of the writer of the "Book of Knowledge" is worse than that of Rajpal, in that he has added a picture of the Prophet to his blasphemous comments on his life. The Quran has been credited to the Prophet instead of being acknowledged as a revealed book and his holy wives have been attacked in most filthy language. Such is the refinement and good taste of a member of a race which seeks to rule the world. Muslims prize their Prophet over all mundane objects, and they can bear all earthly sufferings but can never tolerate an insult to their Prophet, and they lose patience when they see any accursed person insulting him. Government is at present on its trial. It is to be seen how far it is sincere in its protestations that it has regard for every one's religion and how far the severity with which Indian blasphemers have been treated is extended to foul-mouthed European writers. The Medina says that the extremely mean and wicked attacks on the Prophet Muhammad in the "Book of Knowledge" are enough to stir the blood of Muslims. The question is what line of action they should take to stop such attacks. We think that the best course is to draw the attention of the entire Islamic world and to prepare it to make united efforts to put an end to such wickedness. For this it will be necessary to send a deputation to Islamic countries to create public opinion and to prepare all to oppose such unholy attacks. As a last resort a band of devotees of the Prophet should be formed who would be prepared, at any risk, to punish the foul-mouthed authors of such attacks. If some of the devotees demonstrate their sacrifice to some of the revilers such satanic deeds can soon be ended. In another article the paper says that the scheme for the colonization of the Moplahs in the Andamans is a diplomatic move to exterminate the brave and proud race of Moplahs. And this annihilating process is going on so silently, and in such a constitutional manner, that the Moplahs are being led to the slaughter-house and we cannot do anything. What a pity that the Moplahs are being thus sacrificed at the altar of the goddess of enmity and vindictiveness and there is no one to restrain the hand of the Government.

Zaghlul Pasha.

Obituary notices in the Press pay a tribute to Zaghlul Pasha's services in the cause of Egyptian independence and interpret his death as a blow to the freedom of Asiatic countries. The Desh Bhagat deplores the death of this "standard-bearer of Egyptian liberty," and says that but for him the English would have enslaved Egypt also like India. His death is not only a sad blow to Egypt at a most critical juncture in her history, but also seriously prejudices the fight for India's freedom as the geographical position of these two countries makes their freedom interdependent. Nay, further, the world is just now on the brink of a great change: war clouds are looming large; Bolshevism is spreading; and every subject country is going to make a desperate effort to gain her freedom. Zaghlul's passing away should, therefore, be regarded as a world-calamity. The Hamdam says that Zaghlul Pasha's death is a calamity not only for Egypt, but also for other subject countries like India, as the freedom of Egypt would have given breathing time to India and other Asiatic countries His services in the cause of his country's independence were simply inestimable.

The Bettiah Riots.

The Sadai Muslim paper publishes an account by a Muslim sufferer of the atrocities perpetrated at Bettiah by the Hindus who had collected there fully armed even from distant Muzaffarpur and Champaran, and says that it shows that the sangathanists have excited the Hindus to a dangerous pitch. It also proves that Hindu attacks are always pre-meditated and prearranged, and old and weak Muslims are always selected as victims. Some Muslims in every town and city should make it their duty to keep a watch on such movements of Hindus and to warn their co-religionists of danger before the breaking out of trouble. Muslims should also organize bodies for the protection of their weak and aged co-religionists.

United Provinces Police.

Referring to the report that no Muslims have been selected for appointment as Deputy Superintendents of Police this year the Haqiqat wonders whether this is due to the agitation raised in the Council by Mr. Chintamani about the Police department. No doubt the Muslims have got a larger share of posts in the Police department, but will Government show no consideration for the fact that Muslims have absolutely no opportunity for securing posts in the Engineering, Medical, Education, Irrigation, Postal, and other departments. The wrong cannot even be remedied by their having a slightly larger share in a single department. It is a pity that fuel is being added to the fire of communal antagonism which is already blazing by raising the question of communal representation in the Services.

NOTE ON THE PRESS.

UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 10, 1927.

The Viceroy's address to the Indian Legislature continues to receive wide attention. Newspapers of all shades of opinion warmly commend the solicitude of His Excellency for communal peace and, with some exceptions, support the proposal for holding a conference. A large number of papers, however, urge that no efforts for restoring peace can be successful until the district authorities abandon the policy of "divide and rule." The Aj writes:—The sentiments expressed by His Excellency are characterised by broad-mindedness and betray not a scintilla of partiality. If the district authorities had followed his example the communal malady would never have become so acute. If the charges made against the Allahabad police in connexion with the local Dadhkando procession are true even partially then Lord Irwin can know why communal hatred is not suppressed and that if this state of things continues the whole of the Hindu community will one day come to think that the Government itself is opposed to its religion. We do not hold the Government alone responsible for communal tension but we do maintain that its communal policy and the partial attitude of the district authorities form one of its contributory causes. We welcome the Viceroy's proposed conference for unity but doubt whether it will prove successful. It is, however, possible that after being acquainted with His Excellency's good intentions and getting secret instructions the district authorities and loyal persons may make sincere efforts to improve the situation and this may produce beneficial results. The Pratap says that the Government itself contributed largely to the growth of communal tension and that instead of doing any good to the country the proposed conference would only stimulate communal differences and demands. Eulogizing the language and sentiments of the Viceroy's speech the Sainik says:—The concluding portion of the speech is really very touching, but the black deeds of numerous subordinates of Lord Irwin are so cruel that they do not allow the effect of the speech to last for even a moment. The general belief of the public is that the bureaucracy is rejoicing at these disturbances. The Hindu-Muslim riots are to a large extent the result of the policy of "divide and rule" and of the system of foreign bureaucratic administration. Who can say that this belief of the public does not contain a large amount of truth? We assert with the public that if the Government wants it can stop these disturbances to-day, but it takes no notice of the black deeds of its subordinates. So long as Lord Irwin's Government does not remove this belief from public mind whenever His Excellency makes a similar speech he will have to hear the words, "would that the deeds were also such." The Swadesh infers from the speech that the Viceroy is not so sorry for the blindness and fanaticism of the people as he is eager to proclaim to the world that a civil war is being waged in this country. The Medina writes:—Lord Irwin's speech is an embodiment of sincerity and sympathy but it is extremely humiliating and shameful for the country that a representative of a foreign Government should have found occasion to deliver a message of inter-communal unity. It is an occasion for shedding tears of blood. All these disturbances and blood-shed are due to the fact that the short sighted and selfish Hindu leaders cannot bear to see facilities being provided to the Muslims for performing their prayers in peace and for earning their bare livelihood. While the elements of mischief are at work not even a thousand of such speeches of Lord Irwin can produce any effect. The idea of holding a conference is not new Half-a-dozen of such conferences have already been held without any result. We think that peace and good-will cannot be established until the political and religious rights of the various communities are clearly specified and steps are taken to protect the minorities from the oppression and aggression of the majority. It is also our conviction that all these disturbances are due to our subjection and slavery. If Indians are vested with the necessary powers to-day the disturbances would disappear altogether. The riots have also demonstrated the incompetence of the Government to govern India.

The Bareilly and Cawnpore riots.

The Bareilly and the Cawnpore riots have considerably accentuated the communal tension and recriminations. Muslim papers contend that the premeditation and preparedness of the Hindus was evidenced by the lower casualties among them and cite instances of "cruelty and barbarity" practised by Hindus. They strongly resent Hindu propaganda against Muslims generally and police officials specially, and reproduce letters widely signed by Hindu residents to show how kindly they had been treated by their Muslim neighbours during the riots. The Pratap writes :— The Cawnpore police played the part not of a protector but of a devourer. The policemen encouraged the hooligans and let them off after arresting them. People continued to be belaboured before the eyes of the police and the police only remained as a passive spectator. The Aj says that every well-wisher of the Government will have to hang down his head in shame at the manner in which the police behaved itself on the occasion of the riot at Cawnpore. The Surya writes :—From the heart-rending reports regarding the communal disturbance at Cawnpore it appears that the British Government has been removed from there and that if the police had been wideawake the disturbance would not have broken out and that if the authorities had sincerely desired to quell it even after its outbreak the situation would not have taken such a serious turn. Profound short-sightedness is being evinced. The Medina says that as the riot at Cawnpore had nothing to do with the question of cow-sacrifice or music before mosque, it is evident that the disturbance was created merely for the sake of disturbance. The barbarous and mischievous section of the Hindus of Cawnpore made organized efforts to injure the Muslims. If such is the helplessness of Muslims in India we do not know what it will lead to. Under the headings :—"Attacks on Muslims in Hindu quarters ; attempts to demolish mosques ; hundreds of Muslims wounded ; one Muslim killed ; attacks on sleeping Muslims ; the height of atrocity ; driving a nail through the face, etc.," the Sadai Muslim writes :—The wicked Hindus of Cawnpore had been striving to create trouble in Cawnpore for a long time but could not get an opportunity owing to the peace-loving nature of the Muslims. The local Hindu press had been doing its best to inflame the Hindu public and the Vartman had gone even so far as to say that the Muslims would not be brought to their senses until they were crushed. All this has now borne fruit and the Hindu goondas have attacked Muslims without any rhyme or reason. These cowardly Hindu goondas attacked sleeping Muslims after dragging them out of their houses. One Muslim tailor was subjected to the most barbarous atrocity of having an iron nail thurst into his face. Helpless cripples were wounded and strangers and old men were generally the targets of Hindu attacks. Some mosques have been damaged. Hindus have been protected in Muslim quarters and that is why Hindus have been wounded in very small numbers. The condition of the Muslim wounded shows how cruel and barbarous the attacks of the Hindus have been. Arrangements should be made by the authorities for the protection of Muslims in quarters in which they are in a minority. In a subsequent article the same paper writes :—The hospital officials especially the doctors are said to be treating the Muslim wounded badly and this should be remedied. Special guards should be posted in quarters in which Muslims are in a minority. The Nizam-i-Alam makes serious allegations against the Hindu police and says :—The Hindu police does not make inquiries into reports and does not take the trouble to carry the Muslim wounded to the thana or the hospital. The kotwali, thanas and jails are filled with Muslims while the Hindus have been arrested only in name. Many Muslims have to return from thanas without getting their reports recorded as the Hindu policemen show indifference and scold them. The Commissioner came to Cawnpore but called only one Muslim while he had interviews with a number of Hindus. Hindu vakils, raises and paid officials are inciting the populace. Municipal lorries are being used to encourage or aid the Hindu rioters. The Hamdam writes :—If the reports received from our correspondents at Bareilly and the Associated Press at Cawnpore are to be relied upon the Muslims have been the worst sufferers. This shows that while the Hindus were prepared beforehand the authorities were not vigilant and failed to protect the weaker community. Al Khalil is sorry that the shuddhi and sangathan movements and the preaching of violence has produced such an aggressive spirit among Hindus that riots have become the order of the day. The mind shrinks from contemplating the atrocities which a section of the Hindus of Cawnpore committed not only on Muslim passers-by, but even on sleeping Muslims. Worst of all, the Hindus entered into mosques to attack Muslims, dragged them out of their shops to beat them and the height of cruelty and barbarity was reached when the oppressors thrust a nail into the face of Fayaz tailor, damaged mosques in Chakla and Hatia and wounded Muslims in quarters in which they were in a minority. If both the officials and the leaders do not set their heads together to meet this menace, civil war will break out in the country and there will be no room in it for peaceful people.

Dadhkando.

Hindu papers strongly protest against the restrictions imposed in connexion with the Dadhkando at Allahabad and approve of the abandonment of the procession. They also strongly resent the action of the police "in organizing a bogus procession mainly through the help of Muslims." The local Muslim paper Al Aziz supports the action of the authorities and indignantly repudiates the allegation that the procession was "bogus" and a Muslim show The Aj urges the Hindus to organize themselves and to be prepared to undergo the severest tribulations. It is disgraceful for the authorities of Allahabad, says the paper, to be cowed down by the threats of hooligans and to continue to perpetrate outrages on the religion of Hindus by placing unjustifiable obstacles in the way of their religious processions. The question of Allahabad is an all-India question and we trust that the Hindus of the whole of the country will stand by the Hindus of Allahabad in this agitation. The Abhyudaya writes: The conditions imposed by the Superintendent of Police were not only insulting to the Hindus but were also devoid of common sense and supported the unjust demands of the Muslims. It is impossible for others to respect the religious sentiments of the Muslims because there are a number of religious obligations which offend the Muslims. They cannot tolerate the playing of music before mosques, they take offence at singing, the funeral cry of the Hindus wounds their feelings and the sight of idols and processions is offensive to them. When the Dadhkando procession includes the taking out of idols who except the Superintendent of Police can guarantee that the religious feelings of the Muslims would be respected? If the Superintendent of Police wanted to protect law and order he ought to have got the procession taken out as usual and punished those who committed any breach of peace. The paper next condemns the action of the Allahabad and specially the Kydgunj police in compelling people to take out a procession and urging the higher authorities to investigate the matter and prosecute those responsible for doing so says that it is a matter of shame that on the elephant which used to carry the representations of Krishna and Baldeo the Muslim syce of a Muslim thanadar of the Kydgunj thana was seated. These men tried to throw dust into the eyes of the world by organizing a bogus procession but on account of its complete boycott by the Hindus they failed to do so. The Surya says: The Hindus have been taking out these processions regularly for hundreds of years, even when the Muslim flag waved over India but they have not been able to do so under the British Crown. This does not redound to the glory of our Government. When we see such restrictions imposed on our religious rituals how can we say that our Government wants to see us observing our religious functions freely? Let us see what reply our Satyagrahi brothers give to it. In another issue the paper says that by arranging for the taking out of "the bogus Dadhkando procession at Allahabad" the authorities may well have pleased the Muslims but this is certain that they callously trampled upon the religious sentiments of the Hindus. The procession was an absurd farce. Hired Muslims were everywhere in evidence throughout the procession which was so shunned by them. Should the syce of a Muslim thanadar be seated on the same elephant which used to carry the sacred representations of Krishna and Baldeo? We will call this an insult, nay a gross iusult to the religious sentiments of the Hindus. What self-respecting Hindu will not feel aggrieved to see the authorities and the police officers showing partiality in this matter and that also in a reprehensible manner? Let us see what the higher authorities do in this case? The Sudharak writes:—The Government which up till now spurned the self-respect of the Hindus openly is now bent upon attacking them from behind. Has it learnt this policy from those whom it pats? Who could conceive that the authorities would stoop to the meanness of getting the Hindu religious processions taken out by Muslims? Is the Government not alienating the Hindus still more by committing such reprehensible actions. Al Aziz says that Mr. Thompson's order regarding Dadhkando at Allahabad was wise and while showing no favour to Muslims also imposed no such severe restrictions as to make it impossible to take out the procession. In another article the paper says that it is gratifying that the Dadhkando procession at Allahabad was attended by almost all Hindu leaders of the city and the crowd was much larger than in previous years. The Hindus finished their procession before sunset and without any pressure and of their own free will stopped music before all mosques even though prayers were not being said in them. A touching example of communal unity was afforded by the entertainment of the processionists by the Muslims. All the propaganda of the Maha Sabhaites for a boycott of the procession proved unsuccessful. It is a matter for satisfaction that the Hindu community has been rid of the Maha Sabha incubus which had been dissuading it from performing its religious ceremonies by inventing tales of Muslim high-handedness.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu papers are urging with increasing emphasis the theory that the murder of Swami Shraddhanand and other Hindu leaders at Ajmer, Bahraich, Pilibhit and other places are the result of a well-organized Muslim conspiracy. The Leader writes:—We would fain believe that these outrages are acts of individual Muslim fanatics, but their occurrence in quick succession in the course of a few months raises a presumption in favour of the popular belief. Exhorting the Hindus to follow the policy of tit for tat in communal matters the Bharat Jiwan says that when the Government is so openly siding with the Muslims the Hindus will not only have to undertake their own defence but also concert measures to put an end to communal dissensions. Every one who has closely studied the Muslim character has come to the conclusion that these men yield only to physical force and not to soul force, that is they cannot be silenced by reasoning but can be brought to the right path only by drubbing. Everyday incidents show that communal riots have ceased in all those places where Muslims have received a good slap. In such circumstances the only duty of the Hindus is to combat brute force by brute force. The Kailash complains that the Inqilab of August 30 contains an article entitled "The test of the self-respect of the Muslims of Partabgarh" in which it has incited the Muslims of that town against the Hindus and says that the Punjab Government has paid no attention to it because it thinks the Hindu papers of that province have not drawn its attention to the same. It goes on to say: The Tabligi Muslims ought to understand well that religious minded Hindus and Arya Samajists can never stop the work of Shuddhi for fear of death. If a Hindu is killed dozens of Muslims will lose their lives If even 20 crores of Hindus are killed as against 7 crores of Muslims even then 13 crores (sic) of Hindus will be left over. The Hamdam deplores the recent murders of Hindu leaders and appeals to the Muslims of Pilibhit to respond to Mr. Mohd. Yakub's appeal and to give every help to the police in tracing the murder of B. Bahadur Singh so that the Aryas may not be able to lay the false charge of conspiracy at the door of Muslims in connexion with such murders. Government also should occasionally publish communiques regarding the progress made by the police in the inquiries regarding the Bahraich and Pilibhit murders. The Mashriq says that unless Government legislates with a view to stop the present communal riots there will be anarchy in the country. The law against slander of religions should be made a little more severe and the offence should be made punishable with imprisonment alone which may extend to fourteen years. There should also be a law to restrain leaders from making speeches and editors from writing articles which might incite Hindus and Muslims. Referring to the report that in a recent communal affray in a cinema at Delhi the Arya Samajists resisted the police the Medina says: This is not the first instance of the followers of Malaviya and Moonje resisting the police. Such cases have occurred at several other places also. We would like to warn the Government that Sangathan has affected the police also This is why Hindu officials often show slackness in adequately punishing these mischief-makers and sometimes connive at their mischiefs. Such officials need to be strictly watched, otherwise the Government will have to face bitter results. If the Government has become helpless let it give a short opportunity to Muslims who will test the power of these mischief-makers and then permanent peace will be ensured.

Muslim affairs.

While deploring the attacks on Shias in tribal territory, and urging that every help should be rendered to them, the Hamdam opposes any British expedition into Afridi territory and says that a burden should not be imposed on the Indian Exchequer and thousands of lives should not be lost by any such step. The version of the Orakzai tribe and the other side of the story is also not yet known. The Mashriq complains that under the influence of the Hindu Maha Sabha a general propaganda is being carried on with a view to foment trouble on the occasion of Muslim festivals. Not only is the sacrifice of cows objected to, but a Hindu district magistrate two years ago prohibited buffalo sacrifice also though Hindu rajas sacrifice these animals on the occasion of Dasehra. The police is made to report cases in which cows have been sacrificed at places where they were not sacrificed before and riots are got up. This means that persons who have been recently converted to Islam or have come from another place or have become possessed of sufficient means to discharge this religious obligation should not perform cow-sacrifice at a particular place simply because it had not been performed there before. This is the height of injustice. Equally unfair is the demand that the number of tazias should not be added to in a Chehlum procession or a procession should not be taken out at a place where it had not been taken out before. Many people sometimes take out tazias in a particular year in the performance of a religious vow and it is unfair to ask them to quote a precedent for their action. Government does not interfere in Hindu religious festivals and should similarly instruct the police not to note the number of qurbanis and tazias but to give full freedom to Muslims in such matters.

Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

There is considerable divergence of opinion on the Criminal Law Amendment Bill and even those papers which approve it in principle emphasize the need for caution. Some Hindu papers regard it as a concession to Muslim agitation and therefore oppose it. Referring to the debate in the Legislative Assembly on the Bill the Leader writes :—We freely admit that we find ourselves in sympathy more with Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru than with the enthusiastic supporters of Mr. Crerar's Bill. The language of the Bill is objectionably defective in that it is needlessly wide and unsafely vague. In a time of excitement, of suspicion ; in an atmosphere of prejudice or of panic, the most legitimate criticism may be held to amount to "outrage" Where is the guarantee that a law so vaguely worded will not be abused? Can the Hindus of Bengal and the United Provinces rest secure in the confidence that Government and their officers will at all times be rigidly impartial in the administration of the new restrictive law? The law has to be limited and made definite. The Medina says that while the demand of Muslims was for such legislation as could stop insults to founders of religions the Bill introduced by Government is more comprehensive and flexible and penalizes insults to religion itself. In India religion covers even the tail of the monkey, the urine of the cow, the leaves of the Tulsi plant, the branches of the peepal and the bamboo frames of the tazias. In view of such comprehensiveness of religion will not this measure prove an additional source of disturbances? Indian leaders should exercise the utmost caution in accepting a Bill of this kind. They should not cut off their nose to spite their face.

Political propaganda.

The Swadesh writes:—It is quite plain that white rulers and their supporters are inveterate enemies of Indian aspirations for Swaraj. It is for this reason that they are carrying on secret propaganda to establish that Indians are unfit for Swaraj. Miss Mayo's book "Mother India," and Mr. Pilcher's speech reported in the Statesman form part of this propaganda. To-day we are surrounded by enemies on all sides. At every step attempts are being made to wipe us out of existence. The Vir Sandesh publishes an article under the heading "He had come" by Pandit Jagdish Chandra Ayurvedacharya, who describes how God re-incarnated himself several times in the past to save India from oppressors and invokes Him to emancipate India once more from the terrible ways of imperialistic, blood-thirsty white capitalists.

The Kakori case.

Newspapers make earnest appeals to His Excellency the Governor to commute the death sentences of the four convicts of the Kakori case. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We know that justice has to be relentless. But there are cases which deserve mercy and it is for those who are at the helm of affairs to show their courage by giving special consideration to such cases. The fact should not be lost sight of that these young men were the victims of false ideals and if they are given an opportunity to show in their lives the influence of true ideals it will be an object-lesson to society. The Oudh Akhbar remarks:—All these four accused are young men, are repentant and sorry for their deeds, are prepared to take an oath of loyalty for the future and promise to help the administration in every manner and have thrown themselves on the mercy of the Government. We, therefore, strongly urge that the accused should be given one more chance in life and we hope that Sir William Marris's Government will soothe the afflicted hearts of the old parents and other relations of the accused by granting their appeal for mercy.

The Skeen Committee recommendations.

The Medina says that the object of the recommendations of the Skeen Committee is not to develop the military spirit of India, but to create perpetual tension between martial and non-martial elements by bringing them together in the army. God save the armies of India in the future if the recommendations of the committee are adopted.

Foreign affairs.

Referring to the recent treaty between Britain and Trans-Jordania, the Hamdam opines that Amir Abdullah and his Ministers have been acting as British puppets for the last three years and it seems that the Amir has received sufficient training and there is no need left to keep him in leading strings and he will therefore now discharge the duties so far assigned to the British agent. Such is the reality of the freedom of Trans-Jordania. The Haqiqat says that one by one all the Arab chiefs are being drawn into the British fold by the silken strands of treaties. Barring Syria, the whole of Arabia is now under British influence and the last vestige of freedom enjoyed by Trans-Jordania has now been ended by the conclusion of an alliance with Britain. The independence of the Arabs of this tract will be under the grip of British advisers. To-day British diplomacy is triumphant in the Near East, but the eyes of the Arabs have not been opened even after the last war.

The Viceroy's speech.

Newspapers continue to comment extensively on the Viceroy's address to the Indian Legislature. Even some extremist papers while attributing the riots to the policy of "divide and rule" emphasize the need for His Excellency's intervention for restoring communal peace. The Bharat Dharma writes:—The call for unity on the part of the Viceroy became inevitable when he saw that the Government was losing public confidence and suffering in its prestige through communal tension. It is strange that the move for unity has been simultaneously made by the Government and the Muslims. There is no doubt that both form one party, and this party has fully realized that it cannot carry on in this vast country by keeping the Hindus discontented. His Excellency is shedding tears over those killed in riots but this is all the result of his own apathy. If the Government gives up the policy of divide and rule, unity will be established in no time. The present move for unity is a trick to exonerate the Government from the charge of following such policy. The Arya Mitra says that while it is necessary for the Hindu-Muslim leaders to restore good-will among the masses it is also necessary that the misdeeds of Government officials should not be overlooked. What did the action of the Bareilly Kotwal in entering the Samaj temple with shoes on mean? Can such acts produce good feelings among the Hindus? We sincerely wish that the Viceroy's desire to stop Hindu-Muslim riots may fructify and his voice may reach those officials who rejoice to see these disturbances. The Sudharak says that there is one thing in the Viceroy's speech which it cannot believe, namely, that the whole of Britain is anxious for the well-being of India in view of the grave consequences of communal tension and wants to help her in the attainment of swaraj. Proof is not wanting that so far as it lies in the hands of Britain it will never allow India to attain swaraj but will put as many obstacles in the way as possible. There can be no peace between the Hindus and Muslims so long as there is a foreign Government in the country inasmuch as the existence of foreign rule depends upon the continuance of communal discord in the country. The Medina contends that the communal disturbances cannot be stopped without the aid of Government and says:—We think it is essential that we should avail ourselves of the offer of the Viceroy to act as peace-maker. The disturbances should be stopped for ever at any cost. The barbarity which is being exhibited in the name of religion cannot be restrained by sermons and admonitions and a strong power is needed for its suppression. Such a power is in the hands of the Government alone which unfortunately happens to be foreign. If this foreign Government evinces sincerity of intentions on any blessed occasion why should we not take advantage of it? We are convinced that the sentiments expressed by the Viceroy are genuine and are inspired by his solicitude for the welfare of India. In its usual style of pungent satire the Oudh Punch says that no law penalizing slander of religions can bring about communal concord unless justice is administered with an even hand. Government has never sincerely tried to promote unity. Methods of election of members, appointments to offices, bestowal of honours, administration of law are all bones of contention. The Viceroy has so far spent his time in dinners and shooting parties. He cannot even plead want of co-operation on the part of the population in defence of the failure of his efforts towards peace. Will Lord Irwin take the opportunity of explaining at his very first public utterance why he has been dallying with the question for one year?

Communal riots.

Newspapers continue to indulge in accusations, counter-accusations and recriminations in connexion with the Bareilly, Cawnpore and Nagpur riots. Both Hindu and Muslim papers urge the Government to institute inquiries into the conduct of the officials of those places. The Aj says that the carelessness and remissness displayed by the officials and police on the occasion of the Cawnpore riot have confirmed our conviction that the Government too is responsible for Hindu-Muslim riots. Moreover, the officials have become slack, careless and ease-loving. If there had been responsible government in this country, if the district officers and their subordinates could be called to account in case of breach of peace and if they could be punished on their guilt being proved the officials and the police at Cawnpore would not have shown such dereliction of duty. The Abhyudaya says that though communal riots are always initiated by the Muslims and responsibility for them lies both on the Hindus and Muslims, the Government is also not free from blame. We do not say that the Government makes the Hindus and the Muslims quarrel with one another, but we cannot help saying that it does not do what it ought to do to prevent them from doing so. In the course of an article vehemently criticizing the policy of the authorities in connexion with the Bareilly and Cawnpore riots, the case of the sub-inspector of Shikohabad and some other local and communal matters the Sainik writes:—From all quarters complaints are being received of the autocracy, foolishness, oppression and nadirshahi of the authorities. The world is aware of the reprehensible indifference which the Bengal authorities are showing in spite of the fact that thousands of Hindu women have been kidnapped. In our unfortunate province police raj was established the very day Sir William Marris adorned the gubernatorial chair. But now there is a dangerous admixture of nawabi, police raj and Muslim raj, as a result of which people from all sides are crying out for deliverance. Revolutionaries, Bolshevik emissaries and Indian political agitators cannot possibly foment even a hundredth part of the discontent and sedition which this lawlessness on the part of the authorities is bound to produce. We warn the inebriated bureaucracy that if it does not check this lawlessness of its officials they will destroy the very machine of which they form a part. The Hitchintak says that the official report of the Cawnpore and Bareilly riots does not only make one deplore the rowdyism of the Muslims who took the initiative in both the places but also feel contempt for the bureaucracy which rules the country in the name of law and order. Nothing but the weakness of the bureaucracy can be held responsible for the terrible manslaughter in both the places. The Hindus should, therefore, open their eyes and should not depend upon the bureaucracy but organize themselves for their protection. If they do not do so they will continue to be beaten and to see repetitions of Cawnpore and Bareilly riots every day. Referring to the outbreak of communal riots and the murder of Hindu leaders by Muslims, the Bharat Dharma writes that though there were rumours of a breach of peace at Cawnpore the authorities took no precaution against it. The Government spends crores of rupees over the Criminal Investigation department, but this department cannot trace out those Muslim organizations which have been established to destroy the Hindus. In these circumstances, how can it be said that the Government is able to maintain law and order? It is not only ridiculous for the Government, which is unable to protect the life and property of its peace-loving subjects from hooligans, to boast of administrative efficiency but such a Government is not even fit to govern a vast country like India. The Hamdam demands an inquiry into the conduct of the officers who accompanied the procession at Bareilly and did not see that it adhered to the prescribed time-table and refrained from music before mosques. An independent inquiry should also be held into the firing before the mosque by the armed police as the Muslims there were too small in number to be a menace and were also altogether unarmed and could not be expected even to withstand the fury of the armed Hindu mob not to say of adopting the offensive. The Muslims could have been easily arrested and, if firing had not been resorted to, the disturbance would not have assumed such proportions. The police and the executive in India have achieved an unenviable notoriety as to holding human life cheap and the rumour at Bareilly that a Deputy Collector fired his revolver should be closely investigated. Reports from Cawnpore clearly show that the Hindus were the aggressors. The Muslim kotwal of Cawnpore is in an unenviable plight as both Hindus and Muslims complain against him. This shows that he discharged his duties with honesty and zeal. Referring to the Nagpur riot Al Khalil says:—It is clear that the violent teachings of the sangathanist leaders are bearing fruit and it must be doing their heart good to hear of the atrocities perpetrated by their followers. The leaders and officials should realize that if the brake is not applied at once civil war would break out in the country and it would then be difficult to gain control over the situation. Muslims also should organize themselves and engage in commerce and industry if they want to progress.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Hindu newspapers bitterly complain of general aggressiveness of Muslims against Hindus and in support of this charge refer to communal riots at various places, abduction of Hindu women, murder of Hindu leaders and expulsion of Hindu families from the frontier territory. The Chand remarks:—The present policy of the British Government in regard to the Hindus can place the empire in very great peril. If Government will not undertake the responsibility of protecting the Hindus this will lead to very terrible consequences. Hindus themselves will have to undertake this responsibility in self-defence and for the protection of the honour of their women. Then they will begin to form secret societies and when the thought of the atrocities on their mothers and sisters will awaken in their mind the desire for revenge then the existence of seven crores of Muslims and of their patron, the Government, will be endangered. When the entire Hindu community will get tired of this horrible scene of their total destruction, degradation and disgrace, and when the feeling will begin to arise in their mind that it is far better to die fighting with their enemies than suffer annihilation, then rivers of blood will flow from every part of India. We tremble to think of this idea. We disapprove of it, but somebody whispers into our ears that unless the Government of India and the Indian Muslims change their attitude this terrible consequence is as certain and inevitable as death. Even under the British rule of this twentieth century India is to-day smarting under the blows of Aurangzebian rule. Hindus should wake up and know that the power of organization should be the basis of their awakening. In another article the magazine says that the honour of the women of the whole of Bengal is to-day at the mercy of goondas and yet the Bengal Government, with all its army, police and Criminal Investigation department is unable to trace out these miscreants. Is it not scandalous that despite such inefficiency the Government should hold itself to be the custodian of law and order? The responsibility for remedying this deplorable condition of Hindu women in Bengal does not rest only on the shoulders of Bengalis. A vigorous agitation should be carried on throughout the country for the purpose. In the course of an article in the Arya Mitra Babu Uma Shankar, M.L.C., writes:—Since the teaching of the Quran has been spread in India the Hindus and other non-Muslims have not been able to live in peace. The tolerance of the Hindus has led the Muslims to believe that they can do whatever they like against the non-Muslims, but not vice versa. In my opinion, the Quran is at the bottom of all the mischief and being incited by its poisonous teachings the Muslims are practising high-handedness. The Jadu says that the Hindu leaders have made it their policy to preach unity from public platforms and to incite to internecine warfare in private gatherings. They have also split themselves into two parties one of which prates of inter-communal concord and the other inculcates danda-bazi. Lalaji has been a very capable exponent of this policy and it is to be seen whether his sojourn in England has brought about any change in his mentality.

The Unity Conference.

Newspapers are generally pessimistic as to the success of the Unity Conference at Simla. The Pratap refers to the efforts for unity that are being made at Simla and says that Lord Irwin and his subordinates cannot be included among those who have become tired of Hindu-Muslim riots for if these men so desire they can stop these riots by fostering a nationalist outlook among the people and strongly suppressing the rioters but they will do nothing of the kind. They will simply deliver good speeches and show to the world that they have done all that was possible for them to restore peace but could not achieve any success on account of the folly of Indians. Those Indians, too, who look to the immediate gain and have the Royal Commission in view cannot succeed in restoring unity because they are really seeking offices, memberships and honours and not unity. Unity can be restored only by those who look to the gain of the general public and not to their personal aggrandisement. The Arya Mitra opines that the Unity Conference cannot fulfil its mission until it goes into the causes of the riots and the murders of Hindus and tries to remove those causes. The Medina writes :—The Conference is not suggesting any remedies for the diseases which are afflicting the hearts of the people. At a time when the leaders have assembled at Simla for such a momentous task the Hindu newspapers and leaders are poisoning the atmosphere by venomous writings and speeches and do not wish to remain quiet even for the time being. Muslims are goondas, Muslims are tyrants, Muslims are dishonest, Muslims are assassins, Muslims kidnap women and Muslims are the enemies of the Hindus—this is the unanimous cry which is raised from Hindu platforms and the press. Such being the case who can say that even after settling the principles the Unity Conference will be successful in its main objects? The Hindu mentality has clearly indicated that the Hindus are not anxious for peace and that they expect the Muslims to repent of their vices and to seek peace with folded hands. Muslims, no doubt, want peace, but not in such a humiliating manner. In our opinion the leaders should, in the first instance, resolve to try to change their hearts and to base unity only on pure love and friendship, sincerity and humanity. They should also resolve to abandon a number of imaginary claims and their satanic obstinacy with regard to them.

Daschra.

The question of Dasehra at Allahabad is receiving increasing attention in the Hindu Press. The papers are unanimous that no restrictions of any kind should be accepted. Exhorting the district authorities of Allahabad to allow the Hindus of the town to take out their Ramlila procession without any restrictions, the Abhyudaya says that the Hindus will never accept any humiliating condition whether it is imposed by the Muslims or the authorities. If the District Magistrate allows the Hindus to take out their procession without any restrictions they will be able to take it out peacefully and will themselves remain anxious to avoid any breach of peace. The Aj says that it will not be proper to take out Ramdal processions if the Hindus of Allahabad are not allowed their civic rights in respect of the unrestricted use of public roads and, it is hoped, that they will never do so. Ram was born for the vindication of truth and rights. It will be wholly improper to celebrate his achievements at the cost of one's rights. In that case the authorities, if they choose, may well represent some Rai Bahadur honorary magistrate as a monkey and the Muslim sycos of Muslim sub-inspectors as Ram and his followers and take the credit for taking out the Ramdal procession. But all Hindus are not traitorous Rai Bahadurs and they will not like to take out under humiliating conditions the procession of an unequalled hero like Ram. The Hamdam deplores the insistence of the organizers of the Allahabad Ramlila on the fullest freedom to play music before mosques even at prayer time and says that previously this question did not arise as the two afternoon prayers were said in mosques before which the procession was not passing for the time being and the procession itself passed out of the city before the time of evening prayers. The organizers of the Ramlila have now changed the time of the procession so that it will pass before some mosques not only during the afternoon prayers but also during the evening prayer. As the time for evening prayer is very limited, it is very difficult for Muslim shop-keepers to collect for it in a mosque which the procession has already passed and as music interferes with prayers the Hindus have no valid ground for insisting on it unless they are bent on paining the feelings of Muslims and thus bringing about a disturbance. If the old time-table is adopted there would be no difficulty and there should be no objection to it seeing that the Ramayan records that Ravana was killed at sunset and the observance of this timing in the playing of the Lila is possible only if the procession passes out of the city before sunset. Mr. Thompson's efforts to secure a celebration of the Ramlila are commendable and his sincerity is evident from his undertaking that this year's arrangements would not count as precedent and it would be a sad mistake on the part of the Hindus not to avail themselves of his offer.

Muslim affairs.

The Hamdam says that the heart trembles to think of the consequences of the short-sightedness of the Sangathanist spirit shown by the Hindu members of the Lucknow Municipal Board in refusing permission for holding the biggest Milad Sharif of Lucknow in the Aminabad Park where it has been regularly held for the last fifteen years. This incident has caused universal grief and unrest among Lucknow Muslims who regard it as an interference with their religious rights which they are in no way prepared to tolerate. Some Muslims believe that it is part of the sangathanist propaganda to insult the Prophet. Al Khalil complains that the Book of Knowledge has reopened the wounds caused in the hearts of Muslims by recent offensive Hindu publications which had not even had time to heal. Muslims cannot tolerate insults to their Prophet. The accursed writer in the Book of Knowledge has gone even so far as to assert that the Prophet was a man of ordinary morals, was addicted to tyranny over females, was a prey to epileptic fits which he styled as periods of revelation, was deceitful, lying, cunning, blood-thirsty and quarrelsome and was a robber. To make matters worse, the foolish and ignorant writer has given an imaginary picture of the Prophet in which he is shown seated on a throne in a magnificent palace. Only those who know the love and veneration which every Muslim has for his Prophet can realize his burning indignation and we urge the Government to proscribe the offending volumes of this publication immediately and to prosecute the author and publisher. Government would be responsible for the consequences if it inflames Muslim feeling by procrastination in the matter.

The Reserve Bank Bill.

Under the heading "The Reserve Bank Fiasco" the Leader writes :—The dramatic announcement of Sir Basil Blackett in the Assembly that the Reserve Bank Bill would not be proceeded with during the present session furnishes one more instance of the irresponsibility and autocracy of those who hold the keys of power. The Assembly has been treated with scant courtesy and and the Congress members recorded their emphatic protest by walking out . . . Such a fiasco can only be possible under a constitution which is based on autocracy and in which the position of the Government of India is that of a subordinate branch of His Majesty's Government. In a subsequent issue the paper writes :—It was honourable and dutiful on the part of Sir Basil Blackett to have placed his resignation in the hands of the Viceroy as a protest against the objectionable action of the Secretary of State on the Reserve Bank Bill. And it was right that His Excellency should have declined to accept the resignation. It would have been correct if His Excellency himself had followed the lead given by Sir Basil. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The Finance Member took a commendable step consistent with his dignity in tendering his resignation. There is not the least doubt that the country will be sorry to lose at this stage the services of a man of the ability of Sir Basil with his remarkable grasp of financial problems and who has done so much to stabilize the finances of India. The Aj says that the Muslim demand for provision being made in the statute book for the inclusion of two Muslims in the directorate of the proposed Reserve Bank is an instance of the madness of communalism run riot. For this state of things the Government itself is responsible for despite professions to the contrary it has since the time of Lord Minto been supporting communal demands in practice. If the Government were to cease to encourage communal demands, if it were to abolish separate representation, if it were to declare that Government posts would go by merit and if it were not to give all high posts to Europeans, communalism would come to an end in no time. But it is doubtful whether it will ever do so. If Lord Irwin is sincerely anxious to put down this evil, he will have to follow this policy for there is no other alternative.

Indian States.

Muslim papers are vehemently protesting against the alleged prohibition of namaz and azan in Hindu states and some are suggesting recourse to satyagrah. The Mansur urges that, as suggested by Mr. Gulam Bhik Nairang, a conference of Muslim leaders should be immediately held to consider the atrocities that are being practised on Muslims in Hindu states as a result of the sangathan movement and to organize non-violent opposition on the lines adopted by the Akalis. The Medina writes :—Life is being rendered intolerable for Muslims in Hindu states. To stop them from azan and namaz is worse than killing them. Such being the case, the demolition of mosques in some Hindu states and prohibition of namaz and azan and sacrifice is virtually to force them to leave the states.

LIBRARY
10 OCT 1927

If this is a reprisal for the expulsion of Hindus from the Frontier Province then we are afraid that Muslims can similarly avenge themselves in other places as Hindus do not predominate everywhere. This is a question of religious life and death for Muslims. If satyagrah is found necessary it will be inaugurated with a vehemence which will shake the world. The Najat also complains that as an effect of the shuddhi and sangathan movements mosques are being demolished, azan and prayers are being stopped and sacrifice of even goats and sheep is being forbidden in certain Hindu states. Even the Political Agents have failed to redress these religious grievances of Muslims and if this state of affairs continues Muslims might be compelled to carry out the behests of their religion in this connexion. The responsibility for this grave step on the part of Muslims would then lie entirely on the shoulders of the Political Agents.

Political propaganda.

Under the headlines " Great War of the Near Future and India's Military Strength : Some Terrible Scenes of the Last Great War : Disgraceful Treatment of Indian sepoys :" the Medina reproduces an article from the Forward (Calcutta) containing serious allegations regarding the treatment accorded to Indian sepoys during the last war and commenting on it says :—Now that the imperialistic lust for war is making preparations for another great war it seems advisable to give a vivid account of the miserable plight of those destitute Indian sepoys who perished in the battle-fields of France, undergoing the privations of life in foreign country, not only maintaining the honour and prestige of Britain, but also protecting the national and political life of that country. The events show that in the war which is going to be waged in the near future cheap Indian blood will be spilled recklessly.

Music before mosques.

The Hamdam says that emboldened by their success in preventing cow-sacrifice at different places by means of propaganda and aggression the Hindus have now put forward a new fangled right of music before mosques at prayer time. Hindus can gain nothing by disturbing the prayers of Muslims and after their experience of blood-shed that has followed in the wake of this question they should either time their processions so as not to pass before mosques at prayer time or should stop music before mosques. The interests of the nation demand that Hindu publicists should give the right lead in the matter.

Bolshevism.

Referring to Bolshevik designs to create a world-wide revolution, the Vartman says :—The plans of the Bolsheviks will remain secret until a sudden outbreak of war on the battle-fields of Europe. They do not know how to brag or to hold out empty threats. This is the work of Imperialists. The Bolsheviks only want to emancipate those who are groaning under slavery. Their greatest desire is that the peasants and labourers, who are being ground down under subjection, should be given an opportunity to breathe in a free atmosphere and to improve themselves. They want to purify the earth by washing it with blood. They want to quench the thirst of the earth with blood, but with the blood of sinners alone.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 24, 1927.

The Unity Conference.

THE Hindu Press has been following the proceedings of the Unity Conference at Simla with keen interest. Extremist papers seek to make out that no unity is possible so long as the country is under foreign domination. The Aj writes:—If there had been responsible Government in the country, and even if officials had been punished whenever found guilty, surely there would have been no riots. This makes it plain that this is not merely a question of establishing Hindu-Muslim unity, but also involves the fundamental issue of establishing firm and responsible government in the country. Foreigners cannot be responsible for the good of the country. In their own interest it is natural for them not to view with disapproval the dissensions between Hindus and Muslims and to support one of the communities against the other. In its editorial column the Swadesh publishes a contributed article in which the writer points out that the cause of the failure of repeated efforts for communal unity is the subjection of the country. A number of people agitate for posts and offices and take shelter behind religion for self-aggrandisement. The bureaucracy takes undue advantage of such an opportunity and helps to fan the communal fire by its apathy and at times by its partiality. How is it that the bureaucracy which vanquished a powerful nation like the Germans could not check the Calcutta riot? How is it that despite its presence disturbances took place in various places and lasted for several days? What does this silence, this apathy, and this dereliction of duty mean? There is surely some mystery at the bottom of all this. To-day the Viceroy sheds tears over the disturbances and Indians think that everything has been done. If the bureaucracy with all its well-equipped regiments and machine-guns cannot put down disturbances of unarmed communities what thinking person is there who will hold that it is fit to rule? We admit that fanaticism is also one of the causes of communal discord, but it is equally true that it is the product of ignorance or bad education of which a gift has been made to us by the foreign rule. A foreign Government can maintain itself in a country only so long as there are domestic dissensions. Who does not know that the British bureaucracy too exists here by following the policy of divide and rule? The Sainik says that some passages of the Viceroy's speech on unity sound as if the learned lord of demons, Ravan, was sermonizing on the virtue of monogamy. . . . . There appears to be no trace of honesty and sincerity in the Unity Conference. Questions like that of stopping music before mosques have been raised simply to propitiate the "prostitute of politics," inasmuch as it was made clear in the Conference that there can be no solution of the religious and social questions so long as the political problems of the Muslims are not solved. This makes it clear that poor "religion" is being mercilessly dragged to serve the sinful belly and that this dangerous farce of religion is being enacted for the crumbs of "memberships" and services. We are not in favour of such an outwardly, showy, and deceitful unity. The Pratap says that by raising political issues and insisting on their settlement Muslims have unequivocably admitted that the dispute is not a religious but a political one, and have also made it clear that self-willed Muslim leaders, greedy of political rights, are playing upon the religious feelings of their co-religionists for gaining their political ends. Efforts at unity can never be successful in such an atmosphere. Referring to the Viceroy's speech and the appeal of the Hindu-Muslim leaders on communal unity the Hindi Kesari says that the recent riots at Bareilly, Cawnpore and Nagpur and the murder of Hindu leaders at various places show that the communal question can never be solved by speeches and appeals. The police does not even get the scent of the gatherings of the Muslims for attacking Hindu temples and processions so long as the actual attack does not take place. The Viceroy has not even referred to the supreme necessity of the officials discharging their duty with a view to make the occurrence of such riots impossible. So long as the Government does not direct its officials to observe strict impartiality and show greater alertness the Unity Conference is not likely to do any substantial good. The Medina regrets that while the Muslim leaders have most generously demanded a final understanding about important political, religious, social and civic rights so as to bring about a national pact and ensure lasting co-operation the Hindu sangathanist representatives have clearly confined themselves to superficial religious and social questions with a view to wipe out the individuality of Muslims and to absorb them like the Greeks, Tartars and Huns of old. It is a mercy that this cunning move has been seen through by a section of the more respected leaders, and they are insisting on a final settlement of all political and quasi-political issues. Muslim leaders should beware of accepting any terms which offend their religious sentiments or militate against their distinct civic individuality. Hindu Congressmen also should realize the dangers of this course of fraud and deception and should calmly consider the Muslim proposals as lasting unity is unattainable without a national pact.

Communal Riots.

Muslim papers assert that as Hindus make premeditated and sudden attacks in riots, and the police arrives by the time the Muslims manage to start retaliation, the latter suffer most both in casualties and arrests. The papers strongly resent the Hindu propaganda against Muslim police officers. The Hamdam says that the casualties in the Ahmedabad, Sholapur and Bombay riots show how cheap the lives of unfortunate Muslims are held and how the Hindus in their pride of numbers always outrage the religious feelings of Muslims and on the latter objecting attack them en masse. All that happened at these places shows that sangathanist propaganda has fully succeeded, and that Hindus everywhere have been inflamed against Muslims. Muslims remain engaged in their pursuits and unapprehensive of their compatriots, and being thus taken unawares suffer heavily in life and property. The stains of the bloodshed by the sangathanists in Bettiah had not been washed when hot on its heels came the atrocities on Muslims in Bareilly, Cawnpore and Nagpur, and now we see their sufferings in Ahmedabad, Sholapur and Bombay. What is going to be the outcome of this state of civil war which is being created in the country, and how long are the Muslims going to remain thus negligent? The Medina regrets that the sangathanist leaders most cleverly utilize instances of Muslim attacks on Hindus, their women and children and of Muslim invasions of Hindu rights to foment rabid anti-Muslim feeling in their community, and the Muslims have now been awakened too late in the day to the poisonous possibilities of the sangathan movement. Muslims now behold the consequences in their greater losses in the recent riots. Both at Cawnpore and Bareilly the Muslims lost more heavily in life as well as property. At Bettiah the most terrible atrocities were practised. Houses were set on fire, shops were plundered, children and old people were massacred, and now an office is being opened there with a fund of one lakh to defend the Hindu oppressors though they form 95 per cent. of the population and the officials also are all Hindus. The Hindus are bound to escape scot-free. The same sorry tale is repeated at Nagpur, Ahmedabad, Sholapur and Bombay. Muslim leaders should now instead of resenting music before mosques and fighting over petty questions concentrate their energies for some time on tanzim, education, and trade, and they will then find how shuddhi and sangathan are blown to the winds like cob-webs. The Haqiqat attributes the agitation against the Muslim police officers of Bareilly and Cawnpore to Hindu conspiracy to oust Muslims from the police department and regrets that the Hindus of Cawnpore have been encouraged by the concessions made by Government to Arya agitation at Bareilly. The charges against the Muslim police officials of Cawnpore are, the paper asserts, baseless, and as a matter of fact Muslims complain that for fear of Hindu protests the Hindu rioters have not been treated with sufficient severity. The Najat says that the riot at Nagpur was remarkable, inasmuch as the Hindus made organized attacks and even reduced houses to ashes. Everything is possible in a city which is the capital of a province and where the Muslims are in a minority. In truth, so long as Muslims themselves do not discriminate between what is good and what is bad for them, and do not seriously ponder over their helplessness in every riot they will continue to fall a prey to others.

Hindu-Muslim Relations.

The Hindu Press remains agitated over the murders of Hindu leaders and continues to press for an inquiry with a view to tracing the "organized conspiracy" responsible for these murders. The Hitaishi says that the murders of Hindu leaders one after another within the last few months confirm the conviction that they are not the acts of individual fanatics but the outcome of an organized conspiracy, and hopes that the Muslim leaders will try to stop this practice and the Government will unearth the conspiracy soon. Referring to the Muslim agitation for the proscription of the Satyarth Prakash the Arya Mitra says :—If the Government concedes the foolish demand of the Muslims and ever thinks of proscribing that book the fire of opposition will blaze forth in the Arya Samaj camp and will not be extinguished until its object is achieved. The Arya Samaj holds the Satyarth Prakash next to the Vedas in sanctity. It can never bear to see this sacred book being deliberately trampled under foot before its own eyes. We are sure when the time comes every Arya Samajist child will prefer to mount the gallows rather than part with the Satyarth Prakash; he will go to jail but Satyarth Prakash will be in his hands. The paper publishes the enrolment form issued by the Sarvadeshik Sabha to be filled by those intending to offer Satyagraha in case the Government proscribes the Satyarth Prakash in deference to the demand of the Muslims. The forms are to be sent to the Sarvadeshik Sabha, Delhi. In the course of the introductory remarks Shiva Dayalu, Assistant Secretary, United Provinces, writes :—Realizing danger to Satyarth Prakash and seeing their rights being trampled under the feet of injustice and oppression, the Sarvdeshk Sabha has after mature deliberation come to the conclusion that there is no means of defence except tremendous and incessant sacrifice. The paper also publishes three letters by different writers, exhorting the Arya Samajists to take part in this "religious war" and to see that every household whether Hindu, Muslim or Christian, is supplied with a copy of the Satyarth Prakash. The Anand wonders why the Government evinces such slackness ing bringing to book those Muslims who murder the Hindu leaders and wound the feelings of the Hindu community and asks what this policy of concealing the offences of Muslims means? Does the Government hold the attacks on the Hindus to be justifiable, or is it afraid of instituting proceedings against the Muslims? What effect is this producing on the Hindus? Do they not regard this attitude of the Government to be partial? Is it not undermining the prestige of the Government? Referring to the action taken against the Light the Sadai Muslim says that Muslims will never forget the weakness and crookedness of Government in yielding to Hindu agitation and punishing Muslim publicists for trifling offences. Mr. Malaviya defied section 144 at Calcutta, and Dr. Moonje followed suit in Sind, but Government remained absolutely silent. Are Muslims to blame because they respect the law of the land? A Muslim publicist has been throttled on a flimsy and absurd pretext, but the Hindu papers are allowed to indulge in incendiarism and venom-spitting. Government should not give proof of its weakness by becoming a puppet in the hands of the Hindus, but should stand steadfastly by the immutable principles of justice and equity.

Viceroy's Speech.

Commenting on the Viceroy's speech to the Indian Legislature the Aligarh Mail writes :—In the armoury of denunciation of a section of our people the most powerful weapon against British rule is the accusation that the Britishers govern us by the principle of divide et impera. We believe it is the height of folly to make such an accusation, for if the Britishers divide us why should we be so foolish and insane as to allow them to make us quarrel among ourselves? To the appeal of His Excellency the Viceroy for peace and toleration there can be only one suitable answer—co-operation of the people with him in settling communal differences. The Mashriq eulogizes the sincerity of the Viceregal utterance and regrets that it has been hailed with widespread riots. It points out that Hindu officials are influenced by Hindu Sabha propaganda, and suggests that if the country is not to drift into civil war experienced European officers should be appointed as district magistrates and, failing them, Hindu officers should be posted in predominantly Muslim districts and Muslim officers in predominantly Hindu districts. Government should bear in mind that the lust for loot animates the great majority of the population, and anarchy is now reaching within the realms of possibility.

Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

Hindu papers generally regret the passage of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, and regard the measure as a dangerous addition to the "armoury of repression." The Leader writes :—Those who value freedom of speech and writing and realize that the progress of human thought has been achieved, and can only be achieved by challenge to traditions and beliefs which obscure the truth and enslave the mind, cannot feel happy at the passage of a measure which owed its origin to the intolerance of a section of the Muslim community. That it is a retrograde piece of legislation which curtails liberty and renders the task of reformers, who have been waging a war against pernicious customs and beliefs which have acquired a religious character, more difficult hardly any one can deny. The new law is calculated to strengthen the position of orthodoxy and to place at a disadvantage militant religious reformers. Commenting in a similar strain the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The new measure will be a danger to the activities of journalists, authors, social and religious reformers, and will in short mean stagnation in the country. This new engine of terrorization will make it impossible for religious and social reformers, like Dayanand Saraswati, Raja Ram Mohan Roy and Keshav Chander Sen, to flourish and carry out their sacred mission so essential to stimulate and revivify society. The Aj expresses the hope that the new law will be enforced with impartiality and regrets that representatives of communities have not been empowered to take legal proceedings under it. Past experience shows that this section can also be abused. Who can guarantee that it will never be used to please the particular community? Who can say that the Punjab Government has not shown partiality, either deliberately or otherwise, in not taking legal proceedings against the writer of Unniswin sadi ka Maharshi but prosecuting the author of Rangila Rasul. Many books offensive to the religious feelings of Hindus have so far been written, but no action has been taken against their writers. On the other hand, Hindu writers have been prosecuted. The natural tolerance of Hindus has proved fatal to them. This is a good method of teaching tolerance to Indians. In order that one-sided use of the new law should not be made they should take the hint to organize themselves and clamour most vociferously. There is no doubt that the new law has added one more weapon to the armoury of repression.

Milad at Lucknow.

Muslim papers continue to protest against the opposition to the holding of Milad in the Aminabad Park and appeal to the Hindus to be more tolerant and neighbourly in their attitude. The Aligarh Mail writes:—The majority in the Lucknow municipality has shown a very reprehensible spirit of communal narrow-mindedness in putting a ban on the performance of Milad Sharif ceremony in the Aminabad Park, Lucknow. We hope the United Provinces Government will see that nothing untoward happens, and that the Lucknow Muslims are allowed to perform the Milad ceremony in the Park without let or hindrance. The Hamdam complains that the Hindu members of the Lucknow Municipal Board have shown scant consideration for the feelings of their Muslim brethren by refusing permission for holding Milad in the Aminabad Park and reminds them that when Hindus had kept aloof from the board for three years as a protest against the Jehangirabad amendment in the United Provinces Municipalities Act their Muslim colleagues most impartially discharged their duties during their absence and readily acceded to the Hindu demand for a larger number of seats. It is regrettable that a totally different situation has arisen now, and the Muslim members had to resign as a protest against the action of their Hindu colleagues. Continuing in a subsequent issue the paper deplores Hindu intransigience in regard to the question of Milad in the Aminabad Park, and regrets that the Hindu Press has tried to hoodwink the public by stating that Hindu as much as Muslim religious gatherings are forbidden in the Park. It is surprising, it says, that these journals conveniently forget that there are two temples in the Park within which the Hindus can perform their religious functions. The Muslims never objected when a permanent place of worship was being constructed for the Hindus in the Park and when land was twice granted for it, but the Hindu members of the board and its chairman are so narrow-minded and intolerant that they will not allow a most harmless religious function to be performed for a single day, and that also for a few hours only even when no one can possibly be inconvenienced thereby. The Haqiqat says that there seems to be a conspiracy to ban all religious gatherings, including namaz in the Park, and Muslim members should boycott the board until it abandons its biased attitude. Muslims, however, should not antagonize Government by trying to defy the law, but should concentrate on agitation for the annulment of the offending municipal bye-law.

Political Propaganda.

The Vartman recounts the evils of subjection and the various methods which different countries advocate for winning freedom. It says:—Some wish to drown those evils in a stream of blood,—while others would remove them by means of self-sacrifice and suffering. Some regard armed revolution and the use of bombs and pistols as the easiest means of emancipation, while others see salvation in kissing the feet of those who have bound them with the chains of slavery. It is evident that there is a difference of opinion among the people, but all are unanimous that before doing anything it is essential to have an idea of the price of liberty, and, unless there is a desire to do something for liberty, no amount of fuss can secure it. It is, therefore, necessary that those who want independence should think of its price. The Swadesh publishes a contributed article in which the writer, Muneshwar Prasad Avasthi, says that as a means of putting an end to communal tension the Congress should put a vigorous national programme before the country. Such a programme can best consist of the organization of peasants and labourers, opening wide the door of the Congress by removing the restriction regarding the use of khaddar, the boycott of British goods as a protest against recent autocratic actions of the bureaucracy and agitation for the suppression of the use of intoxicants. These movements will create awakening in the country. Dr. Ansari and other leaders should consider this programme at the next session of the Congress and try to give effect to it. In order to avert the Bolshevik menace the Mashriq advises Britain to cultivate the friendship of Turkey, Afghanistan and Persia, and warns it not to depend on the loyalty of any Indian race as Indians have always bowed before invaders. It may be that some Muslim families of Arabian descent might resist the temptation for a change and Government should, in the interest of justice, discard the Congress-League pact and give an equal share to Hindus and Muslims. The Najat attributes the projected Frontier tour of the British War Minister to dread of Russian expansion, and says that events in China, the decline of British influence in Persia, and Russia's intrigue in Afghanistan and Turkey's alliance with Russia have upset British statesmen. The manner in which the Russians have been working in China and Afghanistan and in which they have abandoned their rights there as a first-class European Power, and the way in which Russians have helped in the military training of these countries and have made economic and commercial concessions are moves of a far-reaching character, and have brought these countries under the thumb of Russia. It is because of these considerations that Britain wants to organize a Far Eastern Army for the defence of India and other neighbouring possessions. It would not have been necessary for Britain to embark on this costly project if she had the grace and good-will like Russia to conciliate the countries bordering India.

The Reserve Bank Bill.

Referring to the withdrawal of the Reserve Bank Bill the Aj says that the Government of India is under such complete subjection that it cannot even say without the permission of its master that it acts to order. In the Legislative Assembly irresponsibles discuss with irresponsibles, waste their time and make themselves the laughing-stock of the world. These are our "Reforms." The Medina attributes the withdrawal of the Reserve Bank Bill to the united front shown by the non-official members of the Assembly, and says that the amended Bill militated against the interests of the Government as neither did European capitalists get any share in the Bank nor did the Imperial Bank succeed in securing three-tenths of its shares. On the other hand, the reserves of the Royal Exchequer being invested in the Bank it would be entirely under the control of the legislature which also wanted to appoint its directors by election. This would, in fact, be tantamount to entrusting to Indians a considerable share in the control of their country's finance, and it is not strange that the Secretary of State has thought fit to postpone consideration of the Bill sine die. The Congress members have however seen through this move and are not going to take this gross insult to the Assembly lying down.

The Rangila Rasul.

Al-Khalil says that Rajpal's book is so provocative and insulting that every Muslim becomes beside himself with anger when he listens to its contents. Even Mr. Justice Dalip Singh and Mr. Malaviya have admitted that the book is most undesirable, and the Punjab Government took action to prevent its republication in Amritsar. It is, therefore, a pity that this book is being briskly sold in Meerut and is causing serious unrest among Muslims. Ten thousand copies of it have been printed in Hindi by Baldeo Prasad at the Hari Press, Benares. The Hindu leaders and Government should immediately stop the circulation of such incendiary books. The interests of public peace demand drastic action as Muslims cannot brook insults to their Prophet. The district authorities also should immediately stop the sale of the book just as the Punjab Government has been prompt in preventing its re-printing. The Medina says that the publication of this book in the United Provinces after the Vichitra Jiwan judgement betokens gross negligence on the part of the local Government. Is it necessary for the warning of Government, inquires the paper, that rivers of blood must flow through streets and markets, and can it be awakened from its sleep only when the rising flames of rioting and disturbance are visible from Government House?

The Kakori Case.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion warmly commend the action of the Government in postponing the execution of the condemned prisoners in the Kakori case, and express the hope that the death sentences will eventually be commuted. The Sainik prays to God to grant good sense to this "cold and unfeeling Government" so that it may spare the lives of the four youths. The Abhyudaya commends the spirit of patriotism which swayed the accused in the Kakori dacoity case and strongly appeals to the provincial authorities, and specially Sir William Marris personally, not only to commute the death sentences, but to release them altogether. It says that if His Excellency cannot see his way even to commute the capital sentences, he should leave their cases to be decided by his successor who might like to inaugurate his régime by showing mercy to these unfortunate youths.

Hindu Marriage Bill.

Hindu papers generally strongly support Rai Sahib Har Vilas Sharda's Bill regarding the marriage of girls and boys. The Aj expresses surprise that in face of the absolute and obvious necessity of such a legislation Government should have counselled cautious proceeding with the measure. It says that the Bill under consideration is a very modest measure and should be immediately passed. It would have been much better if law had provided against the marriage of boys below twenty years of age and that of girls below sixteen years.

Unity Conference.

Newspapers generally deplore the failure of the Unity Conference to arrive at any settlement and each community blames the other for it. Some papers emphasize the need for the intervention of His Excellency the Viceroy. The Leader says:—It is not unnatural that many Indians have been feeling that the communal problem cannot be solved until there is a fundamental change in the system of government. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We do not want to strike a note of pessimism, but we are afraid the conference is not proceeding on the right lines. Self-reliance is good, but we reiterate our conviction that the warm hand of Lord Irwin is essential to success under the existing circumstances. The Aj says that the conference has failed because the leaders instead of devising means for the attainment of Swaraj began to concentrate their attention on Reforms. Reforms come after Swaraj; it is wrong to think that they will lead to Swaraj. Swaraj means the right to effect Reforms. So long as this right is not secured there can be no Reforms and so long as Swaraj is not established there can be no unity. The Anand says that if His Excellency the Viceroy wants to establish real unity in the country he should firmly uphold justice and maintain customary rights without showing partiality to any community. When His Excellency has seen that the leaders of both the communities are unable to arrive at an understanding he should himself arrange to put down communal hostility with a strong hand. The Abhyudaya says that the Hindus are not prepared to accept any compromise in connexion with their right to play music on public roads and if their representatives effect any kind of agreement in this connexion it will remain only on paper. We cannot allow fanaticism and violence to be encouraged in the name of compromise. Al Khalil attributes the outcry of the Hindu press against the political issues raised by the Muslim representatives to its fond hope that the discussions would be confined mainly to Arti and Namaz and music before mosques and the Hindus would have to pay nothing out of their pockets in the settlement of these questions. Why, inquires the paper, do the Hindus not accept all the just political demands of the Muslims when the latter want representation in the elective bodies and services only according to their population? Why again should the Reforms be not extended to the North-West Frontier Province which is a part of India? The Muslims, it declares, are now no longer such fools that they would not see through the moves of the Hindus and would withdraw their demands.

Dasehra.

Hindu papers strongly protest against the restrictions imposed by the local authorities in connexion with the Dasehra procession at Allahabad and some other places and regard them as a concession to violence. They warn the Government that this policy will make the task of administration more and more difficult. Muslim papers support official action and condemn the attitude of the Hindus. The Leader writes:—In view of the evasive, though tactful and conciliatory reply received from the District Magistrate the Central Ramlila Committee of Allahabad had no alternative but to decide upon the abandonment of the time-honoured Ramlila celebrations for the third year in succession. A surrepitious entry in a police register, the accuracy of which the Hindus have emphatically challenged, has been relied upon to defend the policy of administrative action which the authorities have been pursuing to the detriment of Hindu rights If in the circumstances the Hindus of Allahabad yield they will be unworthy of calling themselves self-respecting citizens whose duty it is to see that law is respected and force does not become triumphant, and will be inviting further humiliation on themselves. This aspect of the question may not appeal to those who take a narrow administrative view in the maintenance of law and order and who may think that the easier solution lies in placing restrictions on the law-abiding and not in restraining those who threaten with violence the lawful exercise of their rights. But we may point out that this is a short-sighted view which cannot but undermine respect for law and authority and make the task of Government increasingly difficult. Referring to the news about the abandonment of the Ramlila at Etawah as a protest against the order of the District Magistrate prohibiting the playing of music before mosques at prayer time, the Abhyudaya writes :—The order of the authorities regarding the stoppage of music is quite improper and illegal and no condemnation of it is too strong. The Hindus ought to respect this order to the same extent as the authorities respect the Hindu rights and the law. The paper says that though the order passed by the District Magistrate of Allahabad on the application of the local Ramlila committee is different from that of his predecessor yet as the form in which it has been passed does not protect the right of the Hindus to take out their procession without any restrictions it cannot satisfy them. This order may not be objectionable in the eyes of the law but it is surely so in the eyes of the Hindus. Commenting on the abandonment of Ramlila at Allahabad, Etawah and elsewhere the Anand writes :—Prayag is a sacred place of the Hindus but for several years past the authorities have been bent upon trampling the rights of that community and Ramlila has not been celebrated there for the last three years consecutively. The same is the case at Etawah and a number of other places. Condemning the policy of the authorities of these places we appeal to the local Government, the Government of India and especially Lord Irwin to rectify this wrong. The abandonment of the festival has caused intense pain to the Hindus and peace cannot possibly be restored while they are smarting under a sense of injustice. The Hamdam regrets that the organizers of the Allahabad Ramlila were so obstinate as to refuse to stop music for a short time before any mosque in which evening prayers were being said at the time of the passage of their procession. It says that as repeatedly asserted by it the Ramlila procession used to be taken out at Allahabad at such a time that it passed out of the city before evening prayers and that music used to be stopped before mosques in which prayers were being offered. The organizers now want to take out the procession late so that it may pass some mosque in the bazar at the time of evening prayers and also refuse to stop music before mosques at the time of prayers. The District Magistrate is right in rejecting these demands as they are neither supported by long-established precedent nor conducive to public peace. As the playing of music before mosques at prayer time has repeatedly led to riots, the District Magistrate as the custodian of the public peace is quite justified in his attitude. It is a pity that the Sangathanist spirit has so obsessed the Hindu majority that it is not at all amenable to reason and justice.

The attack on Rajpal.

The attack on Rajpal has considerably stirred the Hindu press which regards it as a further confirmation of its contention that there is a conspiracy behind the recent murders of Hindus. The Leader approves of the sentence passed on the assailant of Rajpal and thinks that a lighter sentence would not have met the ends of justice. Proceeding, it says :—We think a sifting investigation has become necessary to find out whether such fell deeds derive their inspiration from any organization. Incitements to violence cannot be overlooked when they are followed by overt acts and Government incurs a serious responsibility by not treating them seriously. If those who resort to this form of terrorism think that they will succeed in cowing down any section of the Hindu community, they are sadly mistaken. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The Rangila Rasul agitation is, as expected, leading to disastrous consequences. The dastardly attack on Rajpal is the tragedy for which that ill-advised agitation is responsible. Is it not high time for Muslim leaders in the interests of Islam and their community to take a determined stand against such ungodly bigotry and hatred which is the real enemy of Islam? The passing of the Bill for penalizing religion will, we are afraid, encourage this barbarous bigotry by leading fanatics to think that Government itself is against honest criticism and that their religion is really in danger. The Aj says that the times and the society which produce such hellish creatures as the would-be murderer of Rajpal deserve to be condemned. Muslims pride themselves on their bravery. It is a matter of shame and disgrace for them that such a cowardly and hellish man should be born among them. Murders have been perpetrated frequently of late. It is the duty of Muslim leaders to take measures to stop them. Their condemnation of the murder and their desire for unity will be established only when they openly try to get these murderers punished. The Vartman says that the attack on Rajpal in broad daylight confirms the presumption that there is a conspiracy behind the murders of prominent Hindu workers and leaders. Government has seen for a long time whither Muslims are going. But it is a pity that it does not want to take any action. Is it not thereby countenancing the Muslims? It should remember that its policy will prove fatal to it. The Anand is not at all surprised to hear of the attempted assassination of Rajpal and remarks that in view of the poisonous agitation that was being carried on against the Rangila Rasul it was strange that its author was safe up till now. When Muslim Moulvis, M. Zafar Ali and M. Muhammad Ali, had gone even so far as to say that if the Government did not punish Rajpal the Muslims, acting in accordance with the tenets of Islam, would avenge themselves they cannot exonerate themselves from the charge of this attempted murder. There can be no compromise with the followers of a religion in which it is possible to praise the assassins of Swami Shraddhanand and Rajpal so long as such a mentality is not changed.

Political propaganda.

The Swadesh writes :—Experience shows that Queen Victoria's proclamation laying down that no colour distinctions would be made in the eye of the law in India was intended to baguile the Indians. If colour distinctions were observed openly under the East India Company they are now observed in a covert manner. Since the passing of the Government of India under the British Crown and the establishment of the power of the bureaucracy, hundreds of Indians have been kicked to death, have fallen victims to bullets and have been insulted in innumerable ways but far from the offenders being punished their crimes have been whitewashed in some way or the other on the plea of the enlargement of spleen or error of judgement. The ill-treatment of Indians in foreign countries and the martial law tyrannies in the Punjab show that these firangis far outdo other Europeans in this respect. The Kriplani incident shows that Mr. Kriplani was insulted simply because he is an Indian and this constitutes a challenge to every self-respecting Indian. This incident gives a lie direct to Lord Reading's statement that under British rule no Indian could be insulted on racial grounds. People who expect justice from the bureaucracy should take a lesson from this incident. If Indians want to survive, if they want to protect the honour and self-respect of their nation and country they should stand up holding their head high. Injustice can be countered only by standing up against it in a fearless and organized manner. The Virsandesh publishes an article by Pandit Surendra Sharma who, addressing Mr. Gandhi writes :— When you blew the war trumpet in front of your spiritual army the enemy got confused. The officials inebriated with the wine of brute force were at their wits' end. The foundations of their edifice of imperialism began to shake and the senses were confounded of the power whose hands were stained with the blood of helpless people in the Jallianwala massacre. But you cried halt soon after. You yourself may know whether you discharged the responsibility of a general then. If you had advanced your forces at that time, it is most likely that the rage of the enemy would have transgressed all bounds and thousands of your soldiers in the form of satyagrahis would have been scorched by bombs and as a result of the harsh practices of the inebriated officials Jallianwala massacres would have been re-enacted in the country. Why, because the governing power which holds its foundation to be strong on the basis of brute force and does not care the least for the good and for the aspirations of crores of people as against its own interests might do anything to maintain its authority and prestige over crores of helpless people. The Najat reproduces excerpts from a book entitled "The other side of the picture" by an American named Thomson. These show that the Mutiny of 1857 was caused by the humiliation during court-martial of 85 sepoys of Meerut who had refused to use greased cartridges. They were brought under arrest to the Military court, stripped of their uniform and put in irons. This was a most touching scene and excited the sympathy of other sepoys. Many of these arrested sepoys had made great sacrifices for the British and had shown unexampled heroism on the field of battle. They loudly appealed to their General to spare them this humiliation and when disappointed taunted their comrades with looking on while they were being treated thus. It was this incident which turned the hearts of Indians against Englishmen. One hundred and twenty sepoys were captured at Peshawar on June 15, 1857, and though none of these had killed their officers and most had joined the mutiny without any criminal intent and a recommendation had been made in regard to 55 Sikh sepoys that they had taken no part in the mutiny, it was ordered that one-third of the number should be executed and they should be those against whom their officers complained. If the requisite number could not be secured on the basis of such complaints old sepoys should be included among those to be executed. All the remaining sepoys were to be sentenced to various terms of imprisonment which was in no case to be less than three years. The blowing of the rebels from the mouth of cannon was a terrible spectacle and produced a great impression In the Punjab a cannon was over-charged with gun-powder and when a man was placed before it his body was blown into hundreds of pieces, and his head fell into the hands of one of the spectators. The Desh Bhagat publishes the translation of an article by Agnes Smedley in which it is asserted that England is making preparations for a war against Russia as she is a thorn in the side of British Imperialism in Asia. England is resorting to every subterfuge of dishonest trickery to provide a pretext for the League of Nations to declare war against Russia. Indians must realize that the future of India, China and Russia is inextricably bound up. An English politician has said that if Russia is not attacked before she has time to complete her military preparations, Asia will one day become free. That is why it is thought necessary to stuff the Indian mind with poisonous propaganda. News sent by the Hankow Government's national news agency is excluded from India while the pro-British news of Reuter's Agency is allowed freely. The object is to keep Indians in the dark so that they may be more easily susceptible to propaganda.

Muslim affairs.

The Aligarh Mail writes :—A correspondent contributes to our columns a communication entitled "Hindu Raj at Ajmer" which reveals how Muslims are practically ousted from the higher cadre of Government services in the Ajmer-Merwara Province. Of 27 Government officers in that province there is only one Muslim. Government service in the Province seems to be the monopoly of one community. Will the Government of India set the matter right before the patience of its Muslim population is exhausted and its discontent finds an outlet in some practical agitation ? The Haqqat appeals to the Bengal Government to proscribe the Rangila Rasul which, it says, is being circulated by certain mischievous Aryas at Asansol. A correspondent complains in a subsequent issue of the same paper that the Shuddhi Sabha preachers go about with naked swords and spears in villages in the Gorakhpur district inhabited by Muslim Gaddis and Ghosis. The estates of Tamkohi, Salimgarh and Rudrapur encourage these preachers and use improper means to force the Muslim Gaddis to change their faith and they are even beaten. The Rohilkhand Gazette publishes an appeal by 58 Timuri princes sent by Khwaja Hasan Nizami in which a protest is lodged against the insulting attacks on the character of the chaste Roshanara Begum, sister of the Emperor Auranzeb. His Excellency the Viceroy and other British officials and Hindu and Muslim leaders and journalists are exhorted to contradict this calumny and to stop the circulation of books and articles and the staging of dramas which repeat it. This insult to the Moghal royal family cannot be brooked by its descendants. Al Bureed also supports the appeal and commends it to the attention of the Government.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Aj traces the genesis of the Muslim demand for separate and special representation and points out that this demand was indeed originated and supported by British officials in order to weaken the nationalist party. It was Lord Minto who emphasized the political importance and imperial services of the Muslims in Indian politics and thereby gave the form of open animosity to the Hindu-Muslim tension. Those who are to-day striving for Hindu-Muslim unity cannot overlook this fact. Lord Irwin who is now appealing for Hindu-Muslim unity should ponder that it was Lord Minto's crooked policy which sowed the seed of the present communal tension. Lord Morley with a view to strengthen the foundations of British rule in India countenanced this immoral policy despite his personal convictions to the contrary. This is the seed of Hindu-Muslim discord and as soon as it is destroyed harmonious relations will be restored between Hindus and Muslims. The Abhyudaya says that some secret organization of badmashes founded on the lines of the Klu Klux clan appears to be working against the Hindus in India. Murders of Hindu leaders and workers and letters of threat received by them lead people to suspect its existence. If the Government does not trace out this organization it would one day imperil its own existence. In the course of a lengthy article the Hindi Kesari cites a number of instances to show that the police, army and munitions of the Government cannot protect the just rights of the peaceful subjects but help the armed hooligans in the fulfilment of their unjustifiable demands. Whenever and wherever the Muslim hooligans begin to commit high-handedness it seems that they have no fear of the British Government at heart. The reason for this is taken to be that Government bayonets are not meant for restraining them but for trampling upon the time-honoured rights of the Hindus. Englishmen are wise enough to realize that this spirit of hooliganism created by them will some day react against themselves but they have been so blinded by self-interest or self-conceit that they are trying to prove the unfitness of Indians for Swaraj before the Royal Commission. In these circumstances the only course left open to the Hindus is that they should protect themselves through sangathan and boycott the Muslims wherever the latter commit excesses. The Hamdam deplores the sad plight of the Muslims of Talegaon owing to their boycott by the Hindus and says that in its present serious form it has become unbearable. If no immediate steps are taken to check it Hindu-Muslim relations throughout the country will become more critical.

Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

The Aligarh Mail writes :—For the remarkable achievement of successfully piloting in the Assembly his Bill to punish scurrilous writings against religions and their founders, the name of Mr. James Crerar will be brilliantly chronicled in the history of central legislation. Mr. Crerar's Home Membership has begun well and bids fair to be a great success if he continues to respond to public opinion as he has already done in having the historical Bill passed by the Legislative Assembly. The Abhyudaya regrets that it cannot congratulate the Assembly on the form in which it has passed the Bill inasmuch as it is likely to do more harm than good. On account of its passage the fanatics will not tolerate any criticism of their religion and will always kick up a row by raising the cry of insult to religion. The Bill would thus encourage fanaticism and intolerance, increase the official powers and prove a new weapon in the armoury of repression and is sure to be abused.

Communal riots.

The Haqiqat says that the terrible events at Nagpur show that Dr. Moonje's co-religionists in that city ought to be congratulated on their having fully imbibed his teachings. It must have done the doctor's heart good to hear of the atrocities of his sangathanist heroes on the Muslim minority. It is needless to discuss the cause of the riot as the facts themselves proclaim which party was to blame. The Hamdam says that Muslims are horrified to read accounts in local papers of the severe losses suffered by the Muslims of Nagpur. Dr. Moonje is to be congratulated that the bands of lathi-bearing men openly organized by him have succeeded in their object and have taken more than sufficient revenge for the events of Kohat from the poor Muslims of Nagpur. The Dinapore riot followed within three months of the Maha Sabha gathering at Patna and history has been repeated at Nagpur within even a shorter period after the session of the Provincial Hindu Sabha there. The official statement that the Muslim processionists threw out a challenge to the Hindus is wrong. It was really the Hindus who were prepared fully armed for a fight and attacked Muslim houses and women and children when the men were away with the procession. The Hindus were helped in their orgy of arson, rapine and plunder by the action of the authorities in posting police in predominantly Muslim quarters and preventing Muslims from going to the aid of their co-religionists in trouble. The Hindu police also did not interfere with Hindus bearing lathis. It is really necessary that an independent inquiry should be made into all these events and adequate arrangements should be made for the protection of Muslims.

Tabligh Conference.

In the course of a leading article emphasizing the importance of the Provincial Tabligh Conference to be held at Budaun and exhorting Muslims to attend it in large numbers the Medina writes :—The successive disturbances which have occurred during the last four years have been actuated by the desire to render Indian Muslims destitute and helpless in every way and to impress with bloody letters the sense of helplessness and destitution on their minds. In our opinion the most commendable feature of the conference is the inclusion in its programme of a competition of those who are skilled in the ancient art of using arms. If attention had been paid to this question at least three or four years ago, Muslims would not have suffered such bodily injuries and loss of life and property at the hands of the stalwarts of Malaviyajee in the various disturbances. The time has come when Muslims should cease priding themselves unduly on their natural bravery, intrepidity and readiness to risk life. They should, acting on the Islamic directions relating to warfare, become embodiments of the injunction : "And prepare against them (the enemy) what force you can." They should do so not for any war of aggression or by way of vindictiveness but in order to be able to live honourably in India and to defend themselves against the undue presumption of the aggressors.

Indians in the Colonies.

Commenting upon the legislation of the Australian Government prohibiting Asiatics from settling down in the German New Guiana the Pratap writes :—It is a good specimen of the system of mandates founded by the robber-like members of the League of Nations. In fact the mandated territories are under the League of Nations and not under the mandatory powers. The observance of such a policy of colour distinction in the territory under its control shows that the League of Nations is the happy hunting-ground of European imperialists. It is since the German colonies of East Africa have passed into the hands of the British that new calamities are visiting the Indians residing there. The reason why some people take the mandatory system to mean devouring is that the masters fully safeguard the mandated territory by placing it safely in their stomachs.

Unity Conference.

MUSLIM papers hold Hindu representatives wholly responsible for the failure of the Unity Conference, and urge that the question of music before mosques and cow-sacrifice cannot be settled unless Muslims are assured of their due share in the Legislature and public services. Hindu papers contend that inter-communal unity cannot be established without the attainment of Swaraj. The Aligarh Mail deplores the failure of the Unity Conference and writes :—The main reason of the failure was that unity-mongers did not discuss the essentials of the Hindu-Muslim problem which are embedded in the question of a fair and proportionate distribution of posts and votes among the educated people of different communities. So long as that question is unsettled, so long the accomplishment of an abiding and fundamental unity between Hindus and Muslims will remain a mirage. The Aj says that the question of cow-slaughter and music before mosques can never be solved before the attainment of Swaraj. There can be no more satisfactory decisions than those arrived at by the Unity Conference of Delhi, but they are useless, inasmuch as the power which can enforce them does not care for them. The attitude of Muslims on the cow question shows that they recognize no need for a communal settlement. The Medina writes :—A perusal of the report issued by the Secretary of the Muslim section of the Conference has led us to the conclusion that Muslims made an honest move towards unity and put forward true principles, whereas the Hindus, in order to gain political rights, used diplomacy to the fullest extent, and, regarding peace as the voice of Muslims, spurned it wantonly. They did not allow political questions to be discussed, which in our opinion are the real causes of disturbances. Had our Hindu friends really wanted to put a stop to the riots and to establish true peace the political questions would have assuredly come first, and then the questions relating to cow and music would have been placed for decision. Moreover, the attitude which Hindu leaders adopted on the cow question was by no means peaceable. The Hamdam pays a tribute to the accommodating attitude of Mr. Srinivas Iyengar and regrets that the Unity Conference was wrecked owing to the failure to select a sufficiently large number of Hindu representatives of similar breadth of vision. The Maharaja of Alwar, it observes, put his finger on the right spot when he asserted that the tension was primarily political in its genesis, and it is a fact that no communal understanding would be lasting unless it is broadbased on a satisfactory solution of political differences. Mr. Muhammad Yusuf's proposal for a round table conference under the presidency of the Viceroy would be too humiliating for Indian national self-respect. It would be a shame if the leaders cannot arrive at a compromise by themselves and have to trust to the Viceroy's intervention for a final understanding. The Viceroy's co-operation would, however, be welcome, inasmuch as it would pave the way for future legislation, and in that light alone there can be no exception to a round table conference under the presidentship of the Viceroy.

Dasehra.

Hindu papers continue to protest vehemently against the restrictions imposed in connexion with the Dasehra procession at Allahabad, and some of them advocate civil disobedience for asserting the civic and religious rights of Hindus. In the course of a leading article, criticizing the Allahabad authorities for merely promoting conferences to arrive at a settlement in connexion with the Dasehra procession and not protecting the rights of Hindus, the Leader writes :—Conferences are not a substitute for impartiality. They are legitimate means of striving to bring about agreed settlements. But failing success, authority is expected and ought always to be ready to enforce justice. But conferences, where officers constitute themselves the spokesmen of one party, or when they have not the will and the strength, or are not allowed to assert the supremacy of the law in order to protect loyal subjects in the exercise of lawful rights, are no better than a wearisome farce if not a mockery of authority. Of such conferences there has been no end at Allahabad during the last two years and more. In a subsequent issue, referring to the hartal observed at Allahabad on the Vijaya Dasmi, the paper writes :— A day of rejoicing has been converted into a day of mourning. This is a mighty tribute to the policy of the present Gov rnment of these Provinces and to the administrative efficiency and impartiality of their local officers. And not less is it proof of the impotence of the Hindus as a community to vindicate their time-honoured rights of citizenship. It is altogether humiliating for Hindus to be obliged to contrast what is with what has been and ought still to be. How true it is that to be weak is to be miserable. Referring to the abandonment of Ramlila celebrations at Allahabad, Etawah, Aligarh and elsewhere as a protest against the imposition of restrictions by the authorities, the Sudarshan says :—If even the Muslims had been ruling India at the present juncture they would have been overawed to see this non-violent satyagraha, but our justice-loving British Government, which goes on proclaiming its impartiality in religious matters from time to time, is violating our religious and civic rights by imposing restrictions on the playing of music before mosques with a view to please the Muslims. The abandonment of Ramlila cannot produce the desired effect on the Government, it rather saves it from the botheration of making arrangements for the celebration. Now the duty of the Hindu leaders is to devise some means to celebrate it. In the course of a signed editorial article in the Abhyudaya Pandit Krishnakant Malaviya congratulates the Central Ramlila Committee of Allahabad on its decision to abandon the Ramlila, and observes :— Now the question is what are we to do next ? What do the authorities, or for that matter the Muslims, lose by our abandoning Ramlila ? It is we who lose our festival and our children are deprived of rejoicings. Mr. Thompson, the District-Magistrate, is only a part of the machinery which carries out the decisions of the higher authorities. The reason why he does not want to give up his power to stop music is not that the Hindus do not possess every right to play music, but because if the Hindus exercise it the hooligans threaten to use lathis. From this it is clear that Mr. Thompson will repress those who are peaceful and do not want to create disturbances, but will bow down before those who take the law into their own hands and are prepared to kill and be killed in the defence of their true or imaginary rights The Hindus of Allahabad should take to heart this lesson which has been taught by Mr. Thompson and should realize that if they, too, cannot use force, if they, too, cannot violate and defy law, and if they, too, cannot risk their lives they cannot celebrate their Ramlila, and it is not impossible that in the near future a day may come when they will not be able to live even in their own homes. Now the Hindus will never be able to celebrate Ramlila if they do not have devotion for Rama and are not prepared to celebrate the lila at the risk of their lives and undergo all sorts of sufferings for its sake. This is the time for the trial of the Hindus. If we want to celebrate Ramlila we should not fear if our heads are broken and we have to go to jail and grind mills. We should celebrate Ramlila as usual in the way we like without caring for the magistrate's order and pass by the mosques playing music. We can achieve our object only by offering satyagraha in this way. There is no other way to celebrate Ramlila as usual.

Communal riots.

Hindu papers regard the disturbance at Dehra Dun as a fresh evidence of Muslim intolerance and aggressiveness which they allege has been aggravated by the weakness of Government. Muslim papers comment strongly on the accounts of "untold atrocities" perpetrated by Hindus on Muslims during the recent communal riot at Nagpur. The Leader writes :—As a result of Muslim truculence restrictions as to the length and the time of Ramlila processions have been imposed upon the Hindus at Dehra Dun The authorities have followed the policy of least resistance. A similar policy has been followed in a number of other places. In matters political it has been asserted that the Government can never yield to violence. But in matters communal a strangely supine policy has been pursued, which has rendered the maintenance of law and order an increasingly difficult problem and has had the effect of increasing Muslim truculence. The Aj says :—Disturbances now occur so frequently that they have become a part and parcel of ordinary life. Law is on the side of the Hindus, but force is on that of the Muslims. The latter take the law into their hands, and the guardians of law and order, in order to maintain peace, prohibit Hindus from exercising what is their lawful right. In other words, might is having its own way over right. The authorities think that it is not advisable to court trouble by interfering with those who are ready to practise violence and that it is safe to prohibit Hindus from celebrating their festivals. But they do not reflect that such action only encourages the lawless. If Lord Irwin is anxious to put a stop to such riots he should ponder whether this is the way to remove dissensions and enhance the prestige of British rule. The Surya also comments to the same effect. Discussing the sufferings of the Muslims of Nagpur the Medina writes :—Nagpur is the beloved home of the dandabaz doctor, and it would have been altogether contrary to the nature and traditions of the Hindus of that place if they had not practised untold atrocities on the Muslims on the strength of their numbers. The account of happenings there sent by a correspondent in a state of utmost distraction is such that after reading it a dispirited and disappointed person is really compelled to say that if oppression continues in this fashion "it is better for Muslims that they should put an end to their own existence fighting or should totally annihilate the Hindus of Nagpur." Perhaps people may be surprised and troubled at these words of the correspondent. But the truth is that when innocent and helpless people are extremely oppressed they become obsessed with such ideas in a state of despondency. This sentence is in a way a true picture of the terrible distraction and indescribable oppression of the Muslims of Nagpur. Matters have come to such a pass that a man is stigmatised as a criminal simply because he is a Muslim. The British Government exists there only in name. Under the guise of law and order the administration is entirely in the hands of the Hindus. If any Hindu is wounded Muslims are arrested indiscriminately. But if hog's flesh is thrown by Hindus into a mosque no trace can be found of the culprit. In spite of section 144 being in force the police shuts its eyes to the lathis of Hindu processionists. Even in the matter of investigation discrimination is observed between Hindus and Muslims. Hindu vakils are present (during the investigation), and if any Muslim makes any complaint legal pretext is found for scores of questions, but if any Hindu prefers any complaint it is regarded as a proved crime. If there is any truth in these statements we wonder what sense there is in Lord Irwin sitting at Simla and talking of unity. If there is such high-handedness in the administration of the Hindu provinces, how is reconciliation possible? The Hamdam is sorry to find that the atmosphere is still seriously vitiated at Nagpur, and Hindus are not satisfied even though they have inflicted such heavy losses on Muslims. The Hindus continue to wound the feelings of Muslims. Though the Muslims have been so severely handled arrests have been stopped, and the Hindu accused have been released on bail and are now threatening the Muslim witnesses. The Muslims also complain that the police takes them from their homes under various pretexts, gets them identified by the Hindus and then arrests them.

The attack on Rajpal.

The Hindu press remains agitated in connexion with the attack on Rajpal and continues to press for an inquiry with a view to tracing the conspiracy behind the murders of Hindus. The Surya says that the attempt on the life of Rajpal, in spite of the fact that the police was aware that he had received letters containing threats of murder, that a Moulvi had issued a fatwa for his assassination, and that Maulana Muhammad Ali had openly declared that he would murder Rajpal if he republished the book, is a strong commentary on the slackness of the police, and such a slackness cannot become any civilized Government. The Government's duty in this connexion does not end merely with the conviction of Khuda Bux, who has acted only as a tool in the hands of the leaders of his community. Those who really deserve to be punished are the people who emit poison in their speeches and writings. The Aj considers the sentence inflicted on the assailant of Rajpal as fair and says that in view of repeated murders it will be only a bold man who can say that there is no organization behind them. In the present case only a tool has been punished, while the real offenders are still invisible. The authorities should investigate into the allegation of Rajpal that despite his decision not to republish the Rangila Rasul, the Anjuman-Khuddam-Uddin had issued a fatwa for his murder. If this allegation is true, then that body, too, is morally responsible for this crime. The Abhyudaya says that the attempted assassination of Rajpal must have pleased and brought some solace to the hearts of Maulana Muhammad Ali and other Mullahs like him who had in their speeches been expressing the desire to murder him (Rajpal) with their own hands. We want to know whether those who advocated Rajpal's murder in public meetings are not responsible for the attempt on his life. When the authorities do not lend their ears to the cry of the Hindus that there is some conspiracy behind these murders, the Hindus should themselves make arrangements for their protection and devise means to put a stop to these assassinations. Taking into account all the circumstances of the case, especially the fact that no Muslim was an eye-witness, the Medina doubts whether Khuda Bux was the real assailant of Rajpal, and says :—The facts of the case show that if the attack was really made by this Muslim it must have been due to some personal quarrel and sudden provocation and could not have been actuated by any communal or religious sentiment. Even assuming—which is absurd—that this attack was prompted by the past black deed of Rajpal, it is the direct result of public feeling. The way in which Hindus have tormented the hearts of Muslims and have arrayed themselves in hostility against them is bound to cause uncontrollable provocation. So long as Hindu leaders do not restrain the tongues of their foul-mouthed co-religionists God alone can change such individual mentalities.

United Provinces Muslim League.

While Hindu papers strongly criticize the presidential address at the United Provinces Muslim League, Muslim papers highly commend it and say that the President's outspokenness was justified in view of the aggressiveness of the sangathanists. The Leader writes:—The perception of truth is difficult for those who are swayed by passion and prejudice which find expression in vilification and abuse. This is illustrated by the address which Raja Syed Ahmad Ali Khan Alvi delivered as President of the session of the Muslim League held at Meerut. His attacks on the Hindus and the Hindu Mahasabha show how his hopelessly communal outlook has led him to make a series of fantastic assertions which do violence to truth . . . In reply we have only to remark that it would be truer to say that the Muslims are in no serious mood for Swaraj, for, if they were, they would not antagonize the majority community in the way they have been doing. The President himself has by his provocative address, which contains absurd and untenable charges against the Hindus and which is so wholly lacking in the spirit of fairness, shown that he has no hesitation in antagonizing the majority community. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The Muslim attitude as evidenced and demonstrated in the presidential address of the United Provinces Muslim League and in the resolutions passed by that august body in its last sitting at Meerut, is an irrational and ill-conceived attitude antagonistic not only towards the Hindus but also to the nation and ultimately detrimental to the interests of the Muslim community itself. The ultra-communal and anti-national lead that the United Provinces Muslim League has chosen to give to the Muslims at this important and critical moment in the life of the nation proves the short-sightedness and bankruptcy of statesmanship amongst the Muslim leaders of this Province and has consequently done a disservice to the cause of Islam and to the future of the brave community. There should not be the least doubt now that the masses are blameless, and that they are mere pawns in the political game as played by the United Provinces Muslim League and other communal organizations. The Hamdam writes :—The address of the Raja Saheb of Salempur has faithfully portrayed the difficulties of Muslims. We favoured the Delhi scheme of joint electorates, but when responsible Hindu public bodies are not prepared to accept it in its entirety Muslims also must stand by separate representation. The Raja Saheb has ably advocated the Muslim cause in this connexion, and has conclusively proved that it is Hindu narrow-mindedness which has forced Muslims to demand separate representation for the protection of their interests and that shuddhi and sangathan, and not separate representation, are responsible for the existing communal tension. We admit the soundness of the Raja Saheb's argument and his conclusions therefrom, but cannot share his despondency regarding the consolidation of a united Indian nation as the present tension is based on unnatural causes which could not last long, and if Muslims were, as advised by the Raja Saheb, to organize themselves they could not only repair their weakness, but also combat the aggressive activities of narrow-minded Hindus and thus aid in the evolution of a common Indian nation. Muslims should keep up their spirit and should never be overawed by superior numbers. The Haqiqat says that the address faithfully reflects Muslim sentiment. We are aware, it goes on, that the Raja Saheb's views will not find favour in non-Muslim circles as they are outspoken and inspired by sincerity. Truth is always unpleasant, and sangathanist anger at his utterance would not be in the least surprising. It should prove an eye-opener as to the light in which leading Muslims view the communal mentality of Hindus and as to how pre-occupied they are in protecting their special interests. The fires of communal distrust were first lighted by the protagonists of the shuddhi and sangathan movements who openly embarked on them in antagonism of Muslims. Extremist Hindus like Har Dayal even went so far as to declare the aim of these to be either the complete conversion or expulsion of Muslims. The result has been that communal tension has reached such bounds that no responsible Muslim leader can now refrain from giving vent to sentiments like those of the Raja Saheb for the due safeguarding of the interests of his community.

Political propaganda.

In the course of an article entitled "Government's Failure" calling attention to the "orgy of murder, bloodshed, arson, loot and incendiarism in the name of God and religion," and referring to the attack on Rajpal, the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—Is it not a fact that Government has failed to give sufficient protection to the lives of innocent people – of workers in the cause of religious and social reform like Swami Shraddhanand who were victims of bigotry and fanaticism? The breakdown of law and order, the riots, the dastardly and murderous attacks on innocent people, the unemployment amongst the educated classes and their stagnation and starvation for want of work, the appalling illiteracy and the soul-killing poverty of the masses, the squalor and insanitation in the cities and villages, and the distrust and discontent of the people and their leaders among the classes as well as the masses all prove the failure of the Government. The Aj holds the establishment of an aeroplane base at Karachi, the stationing of a huge air force in the North-West Frontier, the visit of the British Air Minister to India, the extension of the wireless communications, the establishment of broadcasting stations in Bombay and Calcutta, the opening of military railways in the North-West Frontier Province, the sending of an expeditionary force beyond the Burmese Frontier under the ostensible object of suppressing slavery and the visit of the Commander-in-Chief to that frontier to be preparations in India of British imperialists for a great war and says that the real object of these preparations is being concealed by false propaganda in which our rulers are by far the greatest adepts as established by the last Great War. These preparations go to show that India has now become the centre of British imperialism. Any day troops may be despatched from India for coercing the inhabitants of any part of Asia. The Anand views with alarm the growth of awakening in Muslim countries like Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan, and says that if the present deplorable mentality of Indian Muslims remains as it is they will also strive to realize the pleasant dream of establishing Muslim raj in India by supporting the Muslim powers. This situation will be very serious for the country, and the British Government and Hindus ought to make efforts to combat it from this very day. The Government ought to understand that even if it does not care for justice for pleasing the Muslims by suppressing the Hindus, the Muslims will go over to Muslim powers whenever the Government comes into conflict with them. The Desh Bhagat publishes another instalment of the article by Agnes Smedley in which allegations are made against British statesmen of complicity in the promotion of monarchist risings against the Russian Soviet. It is suggested that the British are financing aid by Tsarists to the Northern Chinese troops. England raises its hand in horror when the Soviet is compelled to hang spies, but nothing is said of the Jallianwala Bagh and Nanking massacres and the hanging of Dhingra like a dog and joy is expressed at the murder of the Russian Ambassador in Poland. It must be borne in mind that while Russia is acting solely in self-defence, England is always working against the life, property and freedom of others.

Muslim affairs.

The Aziz-i-Hind deplores the anti-Muslim policy of the Leader and says that while it objects to the number of Muslim judges in the Oudh Chief Court and Allahabad High Court, it deliberately ignores the paucity of Muslims on the benches of the High Courts of the neighbouring provinces of Bengal and the Punjab. Besides, Muslims are to be found in very small numbers in the Education, Medical, Engineering, Accounts departments, etc. There are two Hindu Secretaries in the United Provinces Government, but not a single Muslim Secretary. The Najat wonders why the Muslims of Lucknow are being deprived of a just and old right of theirs in regard to Milad in Aminabad Park when they do not object to Hindu religious gatherings there. The Hindu majority, it says, is abusing its power grossly, and especially at a time when the leaders are trying to find a way out of the communal tangle. The local leaders and the Commissioner should try to extinguish this spark, as it is feared that as matters stand at present it might in future lead to a conflagration. The Hamdam deplores the action of the Moradabad Sunnis in seeking official intervention in regard to a blashphemous Shia publication and fears that this will open the way for a series of prosecutions of Shia and Sunni writers. It urges that it would be better if instead of resorting to law courts Shia and Sunni leaders were to meet together and agree to the destruction of objectionable Shia and Sunni books.

Reforms.

The Aj says that the report of the Statesman's London correspondent that no Indian would be appointed on the Statutory Commission shows that the British authorities do not at all care for Indian public opinion. This is a fine example of cooperation, and once more illustrates what becomes the attitude of the British authorities when Indians express their willingness for cooperation. Laying aside their communal dissensions Indians should ponder what their non-cooperation was about to achieve five years ago. Experience of the last five years establishes that Swaraj will be attained through our own efforts, and that those efforts will have to be made not in the Councils, but among the people. If the Councils are captured with a view to keep away the undesirables from them, if real work is done outside them, and if the people are prepared for civil disobedience once again we can assume control of affairs where we left it at Bardoli. What have we to do with the Statutory Commission? If our attitude towards the Commission is one of indifference the bureaucracy will be ready to come to an understanding with us. But if we look up to the Statutory Commission for our salvation we shall have only to weep in the end.

Music before mosques.

Referring to the memorial of the Hindus of Surat to the Governor in connexion with the order of the Superintendent of Police stopping the playing of music before mosques during the Ganpati days the Leader writes :—We would congratulate the memorialists when the Bombay Government overrules the local authorities and promises protection to their legitimate rights. An almost common grievance of the Hindus is being created throughout the country in this matter. The question which naturally suggests itself to them is whether they are not being penalized for their law-abiding, peaceful nature. Would the authorities show such scant regard for their rights if they apprehended trouble from them?

Tabligh Conference.

Commenting on Sir Abdur Rahim's presidential address at the Tabligh Conference held at Budaun, the Leader writes :—The president is not unaware of the intolerant and violent methods which have been pursued by a section of Muslims in their dealings with Hindus, which are not calculated either to enhance the prestige or increase the influence of Islam, but he had not a word of condemnation to utter against these. The spirit of humanity, brotherhood and tolerance which he claimed as the characteristics of Islam have been honoured more in the breach than in the observance.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Anand contends that the praise of Abdul Rashid's conduct in murdering Swami Shraddhanand has created a spirit of emulation among his co-religionists and developed in them a taste for blood and says that so long as this mentality is not changed, and demons in human form who think of avenging by blood exist, there can be no peace in the country. It is the duty of Lord Irwin to see that the mouths of all those Mullahs and Maulvis who incite people in the name of Islam are gagged so that illiterate masses may not be led away by them to commit murders.

United Provinces Muslim League.

The proceedings of the United Provinces Muslim League continue to evoke bitter communal recriminations. The Aligarh Mail writes :—The League session held at Meerut has been momentous in so far as it has reiterated the political demands of the community in plain terms. The deliberations of the League are a good guide to the United Provinces Muslims. Raja Syed Ahmad Ali Khan Alavi's presidential address was remarkable in its exposition of the working of mixed electorates which was unjust and harmful to the Muslims. The resolution on this subject is obviously a compromise between the two Muslim parties. Such as it is, the resolution contains a clear verdict in favour of separate electorates. And this is of the greatest significance in the whole proceedings of the League. The Sainik writes : — The proceedings of the League show how extensively the poison of Hindu-Muslim enmity has permeated, how illusive Muslim mentality has become, and how falsehood and knavery reign in the name of religion and politics. The presidential address was instinct with hatred of the Hindus and false charges against them. The Anand says that the presidential address of the Raja of Salimpur means that if the Hindus want the Muslims to stand by them in their struggle for swaraj they should send Arya Samaj across the black waters, drown Hindu sangathan and shuddhi into the Arabian Sea and stop music before mosques. What a good specimen of Muslim patriotism ! If the Muslims have no patriotism and have girded up their loins to coerce the Hindus, the latter should also declare that they do not want a swaraj which may destroy their identity. In another note it says that the Muslims are opposed to swaraj because they want Muslim raj. Referring to the charges of intolerance and aggressiveness made against the Hindus in the presidential address, the Aj says :— This is nothing short of painting black what is white. It is a downright falsehood to allege that Hindus ever attacked Muslims for the sake of religion, though it is true that Muslims always converted Hindus to Islam by means fair or foul. It is nothing but shameless effrontery to charge Hindus with fanaticism. If they had been intolerant and aggressive Muslims would have been submerged in their community like other foreign invaders. Indeed it is their tolerance which has proved fatal to them and has brought about the present critical political situation in the country. Whether the Arya Samajists are intolerant or their opponents can best be decided by the fact that though several of their preachers have been murdered by Muslims a similar charge can by no means be preferred against them. Many learned Maulvis have openly stated that it is no sin to play music before mosques, yet rivers of blood are made to flow on account of it and Hindus have to forego their religious celebrations. So long as leaders of the mentality of the Raja lead one community, it is idle to counsel moderation to the other community. There can be no unity. So long as the demon of communalism possesses such leaders neither Hindus nor Muslims can live in peace. The demands of Muslims grow in proportion to the increasing solicitude of Hindus for unity. This shows that the time has not yet arrived for an understanding. There can be a compromise when both the communities will be ready for it. To-day the Muslims are not prepared for it. This being the case, Hindus can only insist on absolute justice being done. If population is to be the basis of representation, it should be enforced throughout the country, or if representation is to be based on the number of electors fixed on the basis of some given qualifications, this system should obtain throughout the country. Al Khalil says that the Raja Saheb of Salimpur has faithfully voiced Muslim sentiment and has made a comprehensive survey of the needs and difficulties of Muslims. He has frankly discussed the aggressive activities of the Hindus and has afforded proof of his deep knowledge of national conditions by his breadth of outlook. His address will no doubt raise a storm among sangathanists, but that does not detract from its value as a warning to Muslims to safeguard their rights. It is closely reasoned and has conclusively proved that the selfishness and narrow-mindedness of the Hindus have forced Muslims to demand separate representation and that recent aggressive Hindu activities and not separate representation should be blamed for the prevailing communal riots. Communal bitterness has now reached such extremes that no Muslim leader can now refrain from saying what the Raja Saheb has said for the protection of Muslim interests. It is a matter for gratification that the League has decided to stand by separate electorates until the Hindus accept the Muslim terms. The usurpation of the just rights of Muslims by Hindus and the recent birth of militant Hinduism have made it absolutely necessary for Muslims to organize themselves. The Hamdam takes exception to the Leader's remark that the League's attitude towards the question of separate electorates is not inspired by trust and broad-mindedness, and says that in view of the present deplorable conditions in the country and the policy of the Leader itself it is idle to talk of trust. The sole responsibility for the present situation lies on it and on its community. Muslims have shown sufficient large-heartedness and trustfulness in expressing their willingness to accept joint electorates and to work on joint lines, and the sangathanist stalwarts are to blame for the deplorable distrust that has been created in the country. Referring to the Indian Daily Telegraph's criticism of the proceedings of the Provincial Muslim League the Haqiqat says:—The leaders were unable to stem the tide of communalism at the League session because their patience and forbearance had been tried to the breaking-point by the attacks of the Hindus. They only did their duty in trying to combat the Hindu onslaught. It is idle to complain of Muslim narrow-mindedness now when the Hindus themselves first displayed it to the fullest extent and literally drove the Muslims to desperation.

Attacks on Hindus.

The attacks on Swami Satyanand and Manak Chand have accentuated the communal tension and intensified the agitation in the Hindu press for an inquiry into the "conspiracy behind the murders." Referring to the "murderous outrage" on Swami Satyanand the Leader writes:—A regular vendetta appears to have been started against Arya Samajists. It is hard to believe that the acts of murder or attempts to murder, which have followed one another in quick succession, are merely isolated cases of fanaticism. The authorities would not be justified in proceeding on the comfortable assumption that there is no organization behind such foul deeds, and we would urge once more a thorough inquiry by means of a reliable agency to find out whether there is any secret organization which inspires and directs these outrages. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The Government can no longer evade responsibility as guardians of law and order. If the repetition of such heinous crimes is to be avoided the Government must deal severely with the source of the mischief. There is method in this madness and fanaticism. Such attacks cannot be treated as isolated criminal cases. They must be traced to their source and then dealt with. Commenting on the attempts on the lives of Rajpal, Swami Satyanand and others and the assassination of Manak Chand, the Anand says that such a serious situation would not have arisen if the Government had strongly suppressed this brutal mentality in the very beginning and officials had prevented incendiary Mullas and Maulvis from emitting venom. There is always a limit to self-restraint and repeated attacks of Muslim hooligans on Hindu leaders are likely to create a spirit of retaliation and indignation among the Hindus. If the Government wants to save the country from anarchy, it is its duty to make full efforts to prevent these assaults. Commenting on the conviction of Rajpal's assailant, the Arya Mitra refers to Kwaja Hasan Nizami's prophecy in connexion with Swami Sarddhanand's murder and

Mr. Mohammad Ali's remark that if Rajpal republished his book he would murder him with his own hands and wondering whether such convictions can stop these assassinations says that they can never be stopped so long as irresponsible Muslim speakers who are really at the bottom of all the mischief are not gagged. Nothing is too much for the teaching which promises heaven to the murderers of kafirs. If the Government really wants to end these assassinations it ought to find out their root-cause and see whence this truculence is infused. The Anand refers to the presidential address of the Raja of Salimpur praising the peacefulness of the Muslims and throwing all the blame for the present communal tension on the Hindus, and remarks that it is really due to the Muslim hooligans being backed by such leaders that their truculence is increasing day by day. The attempt on the life of Swami Satyanand is a good specimen of Muslim tolerance and peacefulness, inasmuch as the Raja of Salimpur has nothing to say against them. The Government says that there exists no conspiracy to murder Hindu leaders, but the growth in the number of murders makes it clear that all this cannot be possible without any conspiracy. Will not the Government even now increase its efforts to protect the Hindus ? The Aj says that the attempt on the life of Swami Satyanand should open the eyes of Government to the audacity of murderers. Now there is no doubt that this is the result of the fatwas of fanatical Mullas and the writings of equally fanatical journalists. The question at issue is whether the Government is or is not able to remedy this state of affairs now. Rajpal wanted to take out a licence for a pistol, but it was refused. This being the case, the Government is all the more responsible for affording protection to citizens. Such crimes are steadily increasing in the Punjab and the United Provinces, and along with them also increases the responsibility of the Government.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Shahnai-Shariat has an article in which the writer ridicules and attacks the "Gayatri Mantra" and the Vedas and says:—The Medina (Bijnor) reports that Pandit Bhagat Ram was sentenced for having intercourse against the order of nature with a cow. The Quran lays down that women have been created for the gratification of the senses and procreating offspring and animals have been created so that their meat might be eaten and their hides might be utilized and they might be used for riding or carrying loads and not that carnal intercourse might be effected with them. On the other hand, the teaching of the Vedas is that men may copulate with cows, just as the god Agni did in the beginning of the world and Mahatma Bhagat Ram did in the present times, and women may have intercourse with horses. In chapter 23 of the Yajur Veda the custodian of the horse asks the horse to have intercourse with his wife. From the time the Aryans came to India this teaching of the Vedic religion became very popular. Men began to copulate with cows and women began to secure gratification with horses against the order of nature. The Muslim kings declared this act to be a crime, and the British Government also has penalized it. But in spite of heavy punishment the reciters of the "Gayatri Mantra" do not refrain as yet. Those who propagate the Vedic faith should note how harmful the teachings of the Vedic religion are and how beneficial are those of Islam. In another article the same paper says that as the king of Dwarka was born pitch black during the dark fortnight he was called Krishna (black). As Krishna was of lewd tastes he initiated the system of dancing and swinging with women, and his followers dance in various ways and play dramas in the Thakurdwaras during janmashtami. On the chauth day people throw stones because on that day Krishna also killed Jamavant by throwing stones at him and secured possession of his exceedingly beautiful daughter. This ceremony was started this year in Cawnpore much before its time and developed into a bloody riot. It was really a visitation of the Divine wrath on Muslims for their sins and their indifference towards their faith. The Medina advises Muslims to act with restraint at the present juncture and to devote themselves to constructive work as Muslims have suffered most from the riots. It says:—Muslims are by nature peaceful and god-fearing. They are, therefore, incapable of committing any moral or social crime. The attitude of the Hindus, on the other hand, shows that they think that the secret of their political and religious triumph lies in inter-communal strife. Hindus have made the creation of disturbances a part of their communal life. By means of these they want to infuse the spirit of "strength of arms" in their community, to strengthen the walls of sangathan, to remove their mutual differences and to array themselves solidly against other communities. To-day they want to subdue Muslims at any cost. They, therefore, want to provoke them. If Muslims allow themselves to be provoked one of the objects of the Hindus will be served. The Muslims should, therefore, act with forbearance and devote themselves to the development of trade and education in which Hindus excel at present. They should also take to physical culture and the art of fighting. As part of their tabligh programme they should improve the condition of the "untouchables" and secure for them a position of equality among men. Muslims should do their work without waiting for unity with Hindus, who do not care for the independence of their country. As the faith of Muslims is not safe under slavery they should have complete independence of the country as their goal.

Dasehra.

The Aj says that the Hindus could not celebrate Dasehra at Allahabad and several other places owing to the imposition of restrictions by authorities. So far it was said about British rule that everybody could discharge his religious obligations according to his faith; but now this is not true at least so far as this province is concerned. This is the beauty of the administration. One community commits violence or threatens to commit violence and the other community is deprived of its liberty. The community which the officials have spoiled by favouritism will one day frown at them also. Then they will realize the bitter consequences of this terrible policy. To-day the Hindus alone have to suffer, and we hope they will discharge their duty peacefully. How fine would it be if all Hindus were to take a vow not to celebrate their public festivals until they have won swaraj. The Anand writes:—In many places in the country the authorities have been so overawed by the Muslim hooligans that they have hurt Hindu religious sentiments by imposing restrictions on Hindu processions. We ask if it is the result of the peaceful attitude of the Hindus. Will it not lead the people to think that the Government respects the sentiments of only those who want to essert their superiority by creating disturbances and loot mar. The Vir Sandesh says that Hindus should not rest content with merely delivering speeches or passing resolutions in this connexion. They should practise individual or collective civil disobedience against such unjust orders and cheerfully suffer the consequences thereof.

Communal riots.

Muslim papers challenge the report of the Associated Press regarding the origin of the Dehra Dun riot and hold Hindus solely responsible for it. The Medina says:—In the absence of any special organization it is impossible for any human power to keep Muslims unaffected in the face of the intolerable provocation offered by Hindus. Take the case of the latest Dehra Dun disturbance. The Hindu procession which was several miles long began in the afternoon and continued up to the time of evening prayers. Music was played for full half an hour before the mosque. When the time of evening prayers approached Muslim officers with folded hands and in the name of God pacified the wrath of Muslims. When all the means of provocation proved ineffectual stones were thrown into the mosque. Now, say, what angel is there who will not be enraged after this? Still the Muslims should follow the path of forbearance which has been enjoined by their Prophet. The Hamdam complains that the reports supplied by the correspondents of the Associated Press and the Leader about the Dehra Dun riot were highly coloured and facts were distorted to place the Muslims in the wrong. The truth, it says, is that Dehra Dun has for the last few years become a centre of Arya activity, and that contrary to ancient custom extraordinary preparations were made last year in the Ram Lila procession and a demonstration of strength and enthusiasm was made in a most undesirable manner before mosques. This greatly provoked the Muslims, though nothing untoward happened owing to the efforts of the authorities and other leading men. The advances made by the Muslims for a compromise were all spurned by the Hindu leaders and a procession much bigger than usual was organized and a cartful of lathis and other weapons accompanied it. The procession deliberately halted for a long time before the Dhamonwala mosque and stones were thrown into it from neighbouring Hindu houses which predominate in the locality. There are no Kabulis in this vicinity as reported by the correspondent of the Leader. It is not definitely known how the trouble started, but the fact that the houses of Hindus were so liberally stocked with brick-bats. and stones and the participation of Hindus from outside in the procession clearly show that preparations had been made beforehand for a disturbance. The arrest of Muslims in larger numbers is due to the fact that Muslims unduly exposed themselves by coming distractedly to their co-religionists who were besieged in the mosque and that the Hindus predominated in the police.

Muslim affairs.

Al Khalil says that the sangathanists seem to be bent on wounding Muslim susceptibilities and wrecking communal amity. A number of books have already been written which have lacerated Muslim feelings and one book of Rajpal had inflamed the whole of India. He has, however, now thought fit to bring out another book named Balidan Chitravali which contains imaginary pictures of atrocities practised by Muslim kings on the Sikh gurus. The revolting scenes portrayed in the book are meant to inflame the feelings of Sikhs and Hindus against Muslims and might lead to a breach of the peace. Government should, therefore, immediately forfeit this book. The Sarpanch invites attention to the sad plight of the Shias expelled from tribal territory and appeals to Indian Shias to help them adequately with funds. In another article the same paper warns Government against its policy of bringing the Shia territory in Tirah under its direct control by taking advantage of the present expulsion of the Shias from it. The Shia chiefs of this territory have, it says, rendered great services to Government and hold its written promise of protection and it would be very damaging to Britsh prestige if this promise is not redeemed. Government should, therefore, help these Shia chiefs to regain their territory. The loyal Shia community should not be alienated by any ill-advised action.

Reforms.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—If the British Government really desire to avert a fiasco, they must unhesitatingly give India a commission which in respect of its composition and terms of reference will fully satisfy all political parties since they are so emphatic and unanimous in this respect. Amidst the growing multiplicity of broken pledges, which clouds the record of British administration in India, it is such a commission alone that can possibly inspire some confidence in politically conscious India, about their desire to fulfil their pledges in the matter of granting full responsible government to India. But if they underestimate the depth of unanimous public opinion on this question and venture to flout it, they will once more generate that cyclone of 1921, and involuntarily prepare fresh ground for advocating the boycott of the commission and encouraging extremism for wresting freedom from the unwilling hands of an alien bureaucracy.

The Kakori case.

Newspapers greatly regret the rejection of the appeals for mercy of the four condemned prisoners in the Kakori case. The Leader says:—The heavens would not have fallen nor the cause of justice betrayed nor public security endangered if the death sentences had been commuted to those of transportation for life. There are cases in which justice if tempered with mercy appeals to public sentiments, and the case of these condemned men was one of such cases. The Aj wonders what the occasion for the exercise of the prerogative of mercy will be if it could not be used when the whole country with one voice appealed for it. One cannot help saying that Lord Irwin deliberately allowed a unique opportunity to slip by.

Publication of court summonses.

The Aziz-i-Hind complains that summonses are not, as they should be, printed in papers published in the locality in which the defendants reside and that Hindu officers rarely send such work to Muslim papers, and in the same way Muslim officers also patronize their friends and acquaintances. The Hindu officers have adopted such an extreme attitude in this connexion that they send work only to such biassed papers as the Hindustan Times, Leader, Fratap, etc., and do not patronize even moderate Hindu papers. Summonses from Ballia and Gorakhpur are published in English papers of Lahore and Delhi to the exclusion of local papers.

Indian States.

The Aziz-i-Hind is sorry to find that even Raja Hari Kishan Kaul, the new Dewan of Bharatpur, had to resign his office owing to the Maharaja's fickle-mindedness and partiality for Daffadar (now Raja) Kishen. The Maharaja's puerile and high-handed acts, his extreme extravagances and his indifference even towards the Political Agent demand that the Government of India should appoint some capable strong political officer as Dewan there and should deprive the Maharaja of his powers. It is a pity that the self-same Government of India which was so quick to take action against Hyderabad is now silent even though the Maharaja of Bharatpur has got mosques demolished, has oppressed Muslims, has run heavily into debt and has even sent the family jewels which he received as heirloom to Calcutta for sale. His Excellency Lord Irwin should not spoil the young Maharaja by allowing him further indulgence.

Tabligh conference.

The Aligarh Mail commends the views of Sir Abdur Rahim to all the tablighists and says:—Sir Abdur Rahim has given them the right lead. It is, indeed, creditable to Sir Abdur Rahim that at a time when Hindu-Muslim tension is at its highest flow his address is not in the least tinged with anything which may be dubbed provocative and mischievous fanaticism by ill-disposed sangathanists.

The Hindu Marriage Bill.

The Varanashram condemns the action of Mr. Har Vilas Sharda in introducing the Hindu Marriage Bill on the ground that it invites interference of the Government in religious matters and exposes the weakness of the Hindu leaders in reforming their social customs.

Attacks on Hindus.

The Hindu Press continues to emphasize the theory of the existence of a conspiracy behind the murders and attempted murders of Hindu workers, asserts that without unearthing this conspiracy there can be no improvement in the situation and urges Hindus not to depend on the Government but to concert measures themselves for their defence. Muslim papers refute this theory and strongly protest against the vilification of their entire community on the basis of a few isolated cases which they contend were of a personal nature. The Aj says that the similarity of the manner of attack and of defence in the court in the two attempts at murder at Lahore creates a suspicion that there was a close connexion between the two incidents. Indeed the Hindus of Lahore believe that the two deeds were inspired by the same source. The coincidence that an identical report of both the occurrences was published in all the Muslim papers of Lahore and the accused too repeated the same story in their statements in the court is not free from mystery and should be inquired into by experts. There is no doubt that the offenders have been dealt with justly and with promptitude by the police and the authorities, but their duty does not end there. They should trace the wire-pullers. They should find out their associates and their environments, with a view to ascertain whether they were influenced by the fatwa of Maulanas and the inflammatory writings of newspapers or not, and whether they were directed by an individual or a committee. Unless this is done there can be no improvement in the situation. The Vartman strongly condemns the remissness of the police and the Criminal Investigation Department in not tracing the conspiracy behind the murders of Hindus and says: This clearly shows that the Government is afraid of Muslims and is, therefore, anxious to fulfil all their demands whether just or unjust. Had not the Government become so timid and pro-Muslim we do not see any reason why these unbridled Muslim goondas could not be repressed. Muslims in the Punjab have come to think that the British Government is not for Muslims. If the Hindu community wants to live it should now open its eyes and stand on its own legs. It will be a mistake to place the slightest reliance on Government when its policy these days seems to be only to support the Muslims. The Swadesh takes the Government to task for not unearthing the conspiracy which it belives is at the bottom of the murders of Hindus and Arya Samaj workers. Such conduct on the part of the Government cannot but create various misgivings in the minds of Hindus. It is futile and foolish for the Hindus to rely absolutely on the Government in this matter. They should make an organized endeavour to protect themselves. The Abhyudaya writes: The Hindus should concentrate all their energies in organizing and strengthening themselves for the purpose of self-defence. Without doing this it would become impossible for them even to sit or move about. It will not do to depend merely on the Government or its police. Such frequent recurrence of murders is a strong commentary on the Government and its police and administration. It seems to us that the Government has lost its awe and prestige. The Medina vehemently protests against the allegations in the Hindu Press that the attacks on Hindus since the murder of Swami Shraddhanand are the outcome of an organized Muslim conspiracy and says that the arguments which Hindu papers adduce in support of their contention are extremely absurd and dishonest. Proceeding it says:—It is the duty of Government to issue a statement regarding the true facts in its possession. If a conspiracy is really in existence, it should mete out condign punishment to the conspirators and if there is none it should restrain those Hindu papers which have for a long time been vilifying all Muslims and thus provoking dissensions. The Government should also pay attention to the fact that Hindu papers are now openly advising the Hindus to take some organized steps for assassinating Muslims. If as a result of this incitement Hindus do form such a conspiracy it will lead to an extremely terrible civil war and the Government itself will not be free from responsibility for it. Referring to the report that Government has deputed Criminal Investigation Department officers to inquire into the alleged Muslim conspiracy to murder Hindus, the Hamdam says that care should be taken that in the course of such an inquiry innocent persons are not falsely implicated. Impartial officers should exercise strict control over the inquiry which may not degenerate into a hunt for mare's-nest. Al Khalil fears that Lala Lajpat Rai's recent statements on the murderous attacks will kill the last lingering hope of unity. It says that Lalaji has most brazenly accused Muslim leaders though they have always worked for peace. They condemned the Shraddhanand murder and Multan riots but the Hindu leaders have been silent in spite of the murders of Mufti Mahbub Ali and the station master of Madhakar and the happenings at Nagpur, Bettiah, Palsipara, Bareilly and Cawnpore and the provocation caused by Rajpal's book. Any number of books like Qurani Ghazlain, Deva Darpan, Balidan Chitravali, Vichitra Jiwan and Sairi Dozakh have been circulated throughout the length and breadth of India without a timely word of protest by any Hindu leader. Rather their publishers have been lionized and Bareilly day and Rajpal day have been celebrated. Is it not galling to Muslims to see the revilers of their Prophet thus placed on pedestals? Even then Lala Lajpat Rai is not ashamed of accusing Muslims of encouraging violence. The Krishna is glad that the weakness and negligence which had of late affected the Arya Samaj will now be dispelled by God's grace. It says that the Arya Samaj has now become prepared to offer the blood of its best and most respected servants for the propagation of truth and the service of the community. It has produced a galaxy of martyrs within a short time. Aye, what Arya is there who is not prepared to offer his blood in the service of his nation, country and religion? Muslims might be thinking that the Arya Samaj would be overawed by the recent mean and murderous attacks. But they are sadly mistaken. The foundation of the Arya Samaj was laid on sacred blood. There was blood and blood in the very first milk that it sucked and that is why an Arya Samajist never wavers in shedding his blood for truth and religion. The murderous attacks of the last ten months have been all too less. We wish that there had been twice or thrice as many and then the Arya Samaj would have been able to stamp its truth and greatness successfully on the world. Anyway we cordially welcome these murders and attacks for in them lie not the death but the eternal life and victory of the Arya Samaj.

United Provinces Muslim League.

Most of the newspapers continue to indulge in bitter communal recriminations in connexion with the proceedings of the United Provinces Muslim League. The Pratap says that the views expressed by Raja Syed Ahmad Ali Khan Alvi in connexion with joint electorates were full of poison and those on the present Hindu-Muslim tension were in no way different from the strange but provocative outpourings of a cracked brain. Blinded by ignorance and selfishness the Muslim leaders have let loose their hounds and even then they hold the Hindus responsible for kindling this fire. It is the Muslims who commit assaults, back those who commit murders, encourage the mean offenders by calling them ghazis and even then complain that the sangathan movement and the Hindu Maha Sabha are kindling fire in the country. The resolutions passed by the League show its crookedness and hypocrisy. If the members of the League had acted with a bit of honesty they would have clearly seen that in fact those bad characters are at the bottom of the present trouble who get murders committed, foment litigation, and carry out their designs by inciting the poor masses in the name of religion. The Surya takes the Raja of Salimpur to task for indicting the Hindu Sabha and the Arya Samaj for the outbreak of communal trouble and says: Can the president say how many Arya Samajists have lost their heads and assaulted the tabligh workers? Would the Muslims have remained peaceful if they had been assaulted in the same way as the Arya Samajists are being attacked to-day? There are even now a number of Hindu leaders who support even the unjust demands of the Muslims, but is there any Muslim who supports even the just demands of the Hindus? The Abhyudaya says that the proceedings of the League show how much the Muslims love truth, what their mentality is and to what extent they are swayed by communal prejudice. The Mashriq writes: It is a matter for gratification that the presidential address has foiled the efforts of those who wanted the Delhi compromise to be accepted and that the majority voted for separate representation. Al Adl says that the existence of the Hindu Maha Sabha made the revival of the Muslim League necessary for the defence of Muslim interests. The Meerut session was specially successful and its chief feature was that Muslims wholly accepted the principle of joint electorates under certain conditions. The Zul Qarnain remarks: Communal bitterness has now reached its height and the Raja Sahib has only voiced Muslim sentiment in demanding adequate safeguards for the protection of Muslim rights. His advice about organization and self-defence should be taken to heart by his co-religionists. His diatribe against efforts for freedom and the formation of a united nationality should however be condemned as the present communal tension being unnatural in its genesis will disappear in course of time and the superior progress and organization of Muslims will force Hindus to seek their co-operation. The Tamir while commending the presidential address for its "comprehensive and masterly survey" of the present situation strongly criticizes the portion advocating separate representation and says:—The demand for separate representation for minorities is bound to extend to ridiculous limits as the number of minorities is legion in India and the only path for her salvation, not only political but also cultural, lies through joint electorates. All possible constitutional safeguards might be provided but it would, in the future, be not only dangerous but also fatal for the political importance of Muslims which they hold so dear to cut adrift from the majority for some danger supposed or real and to establish a separate political circle.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

In the course of a very lengthy article the Chand writes that though the Government claims to have established peace and order in the country, yet in this twentieth century the atmosphere of India is surcharged with anarchy as is evidenced by ever-increasing communal riots and murders and forcible abduction of Hindu women by Muslim goondas. Indeed British raj has become goonda raj. Whatever may be the policy which actuates the Government in not suppressing the goondas, it is clear that if it had been so minded the communal riots at Lahore, Bareilly, Multan, Dinapore and other places would not have occurred. Anarchy has prevailed on all sides under the powerful administration of the British Government and yet the Government looks on at all this like a passive spectator. The Government makes mountain of a mole-hill so far as Hindus are concerned but pays no attention to the atrocities of Muslim goondas and the venomous articles of the Muslim Press. As a result the Muslim goondas get encouraged and they begin to hold themselves to be the masters of Hindu women and children. But the Muslim community is not responsible for the rise and growth of this vitiated mentality. The question now arises whether the alien Government of India is at the bottom of the terrible unrest prevailing in the country, whether the steel claw of the British Government is working behind the disgrace of Indian womanhood and the country-wide disturbances or whether the prevailing anarchy is the result of the slack administration of the Government. There is no doubt that the apathy of the British Government has greatly fanned the communal hatred. The present tendency of the Government's policy is opposed to Hindu interests and to-day despite the existence of the Government Hindus are being ruled by Muslims. The Government knows the refractory and quarrelsome nature and unjust actions of Muslims, yet it knowingly produces such a situation in the country so that both Hindus and Muslims may remain antagonistic to each other and depend upon it for protection against each other. It also knows that it is through this policy that Indians will have no opportunity to carry on their agitation for liberty. It is impossible that being deserted by the Government on the one hand, and being oppressed by the atrocities of goondas on the other, the Hindu community should not concert measures for self-defence. Will not the revolutionary fire break out among the Hindus? And who can say that in the flames of that fire the perpetrators of injustice and atrocities would not get consumed of themselves? It is on account of the weakness of Hindus that they are oppressed. The present anarchy owes its origin to their weakness and so long as they do not make themselves strong they are responsible for all the unrest in the country. If Hindus become ready to die for the protection of the honour of their women nobody can dare cast an evil eye towards them. It is not sin, but valour, courage and philanthropy to sacrifice one's life against atrocities and outrages on women and for the protection of their honour. The prevailing anarchy is but a prelude to a catastrophic revolution under which rivers of blood can flow in every part of the country, temples and mosques can be wiped out of existence and Hindus and Muslims can tear each other like hungry dogs. This contingency can never be averted unless the Hindu community purges itself of its weaknesses, organizes itself, takes upon itself the responsibility of protecting its women and the Hindu youths obtain their civic rights. After this the existing distorted Muslim mentality will disappear and so will do the policy of favouritism of the Government. Karam Vir Singh, formerly Mirza Manzoor Beg, an Arya preacher and joint secretary of the reception committee of the Nau-Arya Conference, Delhi, contributes an article to the Arya Musafir in which he says: India would not have been reduced to such a bad plight had the Quran not come to India. The atrocities perpetrated at present on Hindus at the hands of Muslims are mainly due to the fact that several verses of the Quran style the Aryas as perverted heathens and enemies of Islam and therefore the presence of these verses in the Quran is a permanent source of danger to the safety of the Aryas. The writer appeals to the Arya leaders, both men and women, to agitate and to request Government to get those verses expunged from the Quran, and exhorts the forthcoming Arya Congress at Delhi to pass a resolution to that effect.

Muslim affairs.

The Hamdam supports the action of the United Provinces Government in reserving the recent vacancy in the Police service for a Muslim and remarks: With zealous Hindus holding almost all high posts the doors of Government offices could be closed even to qualified Muslim candidates if a certain communal ratio was not insisted upon. If the Muslims were excluded from the services the interests not only of their community but those also of Government would be prejudiced specially in these days of communal tension. Emphasizing the importance and effect of propaganda the Medina deplores the absence of Muslim news agencies and says: In India there are three private news agencies and one Government Publicity Department. Reuter's Agency has probably not a single Muslim on its staff. In the Associated Press and Free Press news agencies too 99 per cent. of the staff consists of non-Muslims. Even if there are any representatives of Muslims in the Government department, it is useless for Muslims as its sole aim is the furtherance of the objects of Government. This means that the four news agencies have no concern with the interests of Muslims. The result is that Muslims have to suffer in every way in political, economic and commercial matters, but they had to suffer most during the riots. The Hindu Press and all the news agencies, 99 per cent. of whose reporters are non-Muslims, threw the entire responsibility for the disturbances on Muslims and prejudiced the authorities against them and created innumerable difficulties in their securing their just rights. Not only this, hundreds of innocent Muslims were made victims of law and ruined. To-day an impression has been created in the mind of every non-Muslim that Muslim demands are unjust. The fact, however, is that in the various recent riots it was the Hindus who furnished causes of riots and got ready all the material for fight and made all preparations for disturbances. Does this not show that it is imperative for Muslims to have a news agency of their own with a large capital? We think that one of the means by which Muslims can defend themselves against the attacks made on them by Hindus and Government officials is that the Muslim Press should raise a unanimous voice against them and place the true facts before the country and demand justice.

Political propaganda.

The Pratap publishes an article by Dr. Randhir Singh, M.A., ph. D. (Berlin) who says that the British Government evinces a great deal of ambition on the strength of India's men and money and acting in concert with the Indian Government it is always busy devising means to keep India in perpetual bondage and with her help to maintain its domination over other countries. Our leaders should be always on their guard against such moves. Though the British always sing songs of world peace their real intention is something different as is apparent from the war preparations which they are making in Asia and specially in India. What is the duty of Indian leaders at such a juncture? If the British go to war against any Asiatic power or powers and seek the help of India Indians should never give any help in that sinful war. The clever British politicians may well swear by humanity, justice and rights but they can by no means conceal the bitter but obvious truth that they wage war simply to promote the interests of their capitalists. We should, therefore, make preparations even now to combat the coming catastrophy and offer satyagrah against the coming great war.

United Provinces Liberal Conference.

The Indian Daily Telegraph writes: Pandit Iqbal Narain Gurtu's presidential address gives ample proof of his sincerity and courage, sympathy and patriotism. It is an unbiased and exhaustive statement of facts but it must be admitted that it is disappointing in respect of constructive suggestions. He has stated the truth, but not the whole truth. His speech is true to his creed but it does not lead the country very far. The Zul Qarnain says that Mr. Gurtu's observations should be noted by those Hindus who believe that Muslims have no right to live in India. He said just what was expected of him about separate representation but Muslims are not to blame if the Maha Sabhaites and liberals did not accept the conditions under which they were prepared to agree to joint electorates.

Communal riots.

Referring to the Dehra Dun riot the Leader says: As we commented somewhat adversely on the district magistrate's restrictive orders, not being in possession of all the relevant facts, we are glad to say that a perusal of the correspondence which took place between him and Mr. C. P. Singh shows that he acted like a thorough gentleman and evinced a spirit of impartiality, firmness and fairness which deserves appreciation. The Aj writes: Mr. C. P. Singh's statement shows that Mr. Mason's conduct was commendable throughout and that he never wanted to hurt the feelings of, or show partiality to, any community. This quality is a rare and invaluable commodity these days. It can also be inferred from this statement that the provincial Government have no definite policy in this connexion, that local authorities make decisions according to their discretion and inclination and that the higher authorities support their actions. It is surprising that the provincial Government should have no policy in connexion with the problem which has shaken the country to its very foundations otherwise how is it possible that while one district magistrate should recognize the right of citizens to take out processions with music on public roads at all hours of the day another district magistrate should deny it? Mr. C. P. Singh's statement has made it clear that Muslims alone were responsible for the Dehra Dun riot.

Unity Conference.

The Leader writes: It does not require any prophetic vision to foretell what the fate of the next unity conference convened by the president of the Congress will be. This conference, if it is held, will be much less representative than the Simla one and will probably be a much greater farce. The Indian Daily Telegraph says: The bogey of communal dissensions will be handy and can be trotted out when the Royal Commission records its impressions for preparing a report to be submitted to the House of Commons. The persistence of a grave communal situation gives a positive indication of the fact that the Government are either incompetent to govern or guilty of criminal apathy. As it is they have miserably failed in putting a stop to the campaign of murders and murderous assaults. In view of these circumstances, the duty of exploring all possible avenues of reconciliation devolves upon the Indian National Congress which must do all it can to promote communal peace and good-will and build up a healthy nationalism.

Music before mosques.

The Medina commends the action of the district magistrates of Allahabad and Chhindwara in imposing restrictions regarding the playing of music before mosques during religious processions and thus averting bloodshed and says: If Lord Irwin and his Government want to prevent bloody riots during religious functions it is their duty to lay down that no music should be played before mosques, at least during prayer times. The displeasure of Hindus and the abandonment of idols in public libraries and other similar demonstrations of dissatisfaction are trifling compared with the sufferings and loss of life and property entailed by riots. The Vartman is jubilant over the "success" of the Patuakhali satyagraha and says: The success of the Patuakhali satyagraha means the success of the entire Hindu community. It is a triumph of justice over injustice, of righteousness over unrighteousness, of morality over immorality and of self-sacrifice over obstinacy. May this success inspire young men to sacrifice themselves at the altar of the service of their community.

The Kakori case.

Some newspapers have commented strongly on the rejection of the appeal of the condemned prisoners in the Kakori case. The Sainik regards the action of Lord Irwin and Sir William Marris as extremely callous and hard-hearted and says: In its pride of power the bureaucracy does not care in the least for the feelings of the public. If it had commuted the death sentences neither would the earth have cracked nor would the sky have tumbled down. If it derives satisfaction only by hanging these youths let it do so, but those who have hearts will always pray God to grant solace to the souls of those who are sacrificing themselves at the altar of liberty.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Most of the newspapers remain absorbed in bitter accusations and counter-accusations in connexion with the various communal questions. Referring to the threatening letters received by Hindu leaders and workers such as Principal Diwan Chand and Professor Hira Lal Khanna of Cawnpore, Dr. Chauth Ram of Sindh and Dr. D. N. Savarkar of Bombay, the Abhyudaya says: In ordinary times much importance would not have been attached to these threats but we see that they are not empty and are actually carried out. In these circumstances it is necessary that they should be fully investigated and those who are found guilty should be severely dealt with, but the Government is not doing its duty in this connexion. If the Government does not take necessary steps the country will in a way be plunged into anarchy and the reign of law will be swept away. The Arya Mittra contains an article by Kunwar Chand Karan Sharda in the course of which he says: People of other religions have been scared out of their wits to see the steady success of the Arya Samaj and now they are making strenuous efforts to destroy it. What is the duty of brave Aryas in these circumstances? Arya Samajists should give up relying on the Government and condemning its pro-Muslim policy but should instead bring their community into the field of action by reforming their internal evils and removing caste restrictions. It is folly to fear the Muslims. They have neither political power nor wealth nor education. They are inferior to the Hindus in every respect except in organization. If the Hindus organize themselves, the Government will at once take off its spectacles of partiality. Instead of relying on Government and its law courts we should pray to God that we may give up our mild and compassionate disposition and acquire manly attributes for punishing evil and wicked assassins. Only then can these assassinations and atrocities come to an end. If we give way to fear all the work of shuddhi and sangathan for which Swami Dayanand, Swami Shraddhanand, and Pandit Lekh Ram sacrificed themselves will be stopped. In the course of a lengthy article in the paper, Babu Uma Shankar, M.L.C. quotes two verses of the Quran "inculcating the killing of non-believers" to show that there can be no peace in the country so long as the Muslims are under the influence of such teachings. He holds the failure of the unity conference, the outbreak of riots at various places and the murders of and assaults on Hindus to be the result of such poisonous literature and deplores that the Government which promptly enacted a law to allay the Rangila Rasul agitation did not do anything to proscribe such literature in spite of the fact that the united voice of crores of Hindus has drawn its attention to the necessity of doing so. He says that it is the duty of every thoughtful and justice-loving non-Muslim and of the Government to see that such poisonous literature is proscribed and its authors and publishers are prosecuted. He asks if the fact that hundreds of defence witnesses were produced to secure the release of Abdul Rashid, the murderer of Swami Shraddhanand, and the collection of thousands of rupees by subscription to defray the expenses of his appeal to the Privy Council do not show that the murder was the result of a conspiracy. The Digdarshan has an article by Pandit Neki Ram Sharma who writes: That Pandit Indra who petitioned the Government to show mercy to Swami Shraddha-nand's assassin, Abdul Rashid, and who is eager to make friends with the Muslims even at a disadvantage can be made the victim of section 153A is possible only under the pro-Muslim Government. There is no law for the Muslim leaders who inculcate cowardly attacks on Hindu leaders and workers and Muslim papers which are full of venomous articles. All the laws and repressive bills are being tried on the poor Hindus who are dying for devotion to peace. Muslim conspiracy is working our destruction and the Government before whom we complain of this is using its weapon of law against us. God alone can help the Hindus in these circumstances. The only means of self-defence left with the Hindus is to sink their differences and organize themselves. Commenting on the recent Lahore outrages and the prosecution of Professor Indra, the Shakti says: These incidents have led people to believe that the Government has ceased to function and that it wants to suppress the Hindus, specially the Arya Samajists. The situation is very serious. The times are even worse than the régime of Aurangzeb. Al Khalil recalls its repeated warnings to Government that a section of the Hindus had started an organized and persistent conspiracy to provoke Muslims by maligning their Prophet and thus to disturb the peace of the country and says that following the recent demands for the proscription of the Quran, the Tej of October 20, has published a most painful and inflammatory article entitled "The dangerous aspect of Quranic teachings" in which the holy Quran and Islam have been alleged to inculcate murder and bloodshed and blasphemous attacks have also been levelled against the character of the Prophet and the khalifas. The companions of the Prophet and Islamic conquerors have been painted as blood-thirsty plunderers and devastators and the bloodshed that naturally attends invasions and the fatwas of M. Muhammad Ali and M. Abdul Bari have been attributed to Quranic teachings. Government should carefully peruse this vitriolic effort to insult the Quran and Islamic religious leaders and notabilities, to provoke Muslims and to promote hatred between the two communities. This article has made our own blood boil, not to say of the masses. Muslims should even in these extremes hold themselves in patience and remain peaceful. If Government does not take action even on this article there will be widespread unrest among Muslims and the mischief-makers will be further emboldened. The Rohilkhand Gazette deplores the unlawful methods pursued by shuddhi workers in the Gorakhpur district and says that the sad incidents of that locality show that the prestige of Government is non-existent there. The Raja Sahib of Tamkohi thinks that shuddhi work is above all law and violence and force should be freely used in it. Muslim gaddis are caught and forcibly deprived of their beards and made to burn their dead. Gorakhpur has revealed that shuddhi is terrorism in its naked horror. The Najat warns Hindus never to expect Muslims to have any consideration for the cow and says that no compromise in regard to the matter can prove lasting. Muslims, too, have no right to expect veneration for their mosques by Hindus and should not mind if the latter disturb their prayers by music. In the course of a leading article on the question of music before mosques, the Medina writes: The march of political events has made it clear that India is yet to remain in the chains of subjection for a long time to come. The responsibility for this lies mainly on the Hindus and not on the Muslims, for whereas the latter, in spite of having lived in India for a comparatively short time, have contributed a vast treasure of their civilization for her welfare, the former have been trying to turn the Muslims out of India. It would not have been difficult to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the two most important questions, namely music before mosques and cow sacrifice but for the fact that they are being made to serve political ends by being used as levers for Hindu organization, extorting political concessions from Government and causing loss of Muslim lives and property by means of riots.

Attacks on Hindus.

The Hindu press remains greatly excited over the murders and attempted murders of Hindus. Muslim papers emphatically refute the theory of organized conspiracy. Commenting on the assault on Swami Satyanand and the murder of Balwant Rao of Indore, the Hindi Kesari contends that behind these outrages there is a formidable and organized party, the sole object of which is to carry out the threats offered by Muslim speakers and writers. It says: Can any one judge how much the head of that community has been turned which contains an adequate number of leaders who can sympathize even with the assassin of a revered personage like Swami Shraddhanand? The days are gone by when such offences could be prevented by awarding severe sentences. The same Government which resounds the heaven and earth with the cries of "conspiracy", "conspiracy" in case some "Jackson" is murdered does not scent conspiracy even when the helpless Hindus of the Punjab, Delhi, and the United Provinces are cowardly murdered. Viewing with satisfaction the report that an additional staff of the Criminal Investigation Department has been posted in Lahore to trace out the culprits connected with the recent assaults in that city, the Surya writes: The Government ought to show the same promptness and energy in unearthing the communal conspiracy as it does in respect of the political ones. Its duty does not end merely with punishing the accused howsoever severely but it is also necessary that it should punish those men who accentuate communal tension by their speeches and writings and inspire murders. Commenting on the articles written by Lala Lajpat Rai on the subject of Lahore murders and the assaults made on some "hotspurs" of the Hindu community, the Medina says that these incidents do not justify Lalaji's attacks on the teachings of Islam and the Quran. If Lalaji had but considered with an unbiased mind the articles and speeches of Bhai Parmanand alone among many fire-eating Hindu authors, speakers, journalists, and leaders, he would have realized that it is these men who are primarily responsible for stirring up class hatred which has led to these unhappy incidents. Referring to the hasti and severity with which the district magistrate of Lahore has himself punished the assailants of Rajpal and Swami Satyanand the Hamdam wonders why the Lahore journals have not drawn special attention to the strange procedure adopted and the special powers exercised by the district magistrate in deciding these cases. Mr. Ogilvie should not have made use of his special powers in passing such a heavy sentence and should not have hurried the proceedings in a manner which would fail to satisfy the public as to their being correct and impartial. If district magistrates can try cases of attempted murder and pass a sentence of fourteen years what need is left for sessions courts? Further, after receiving a Hindu deputation about the attack on Swami Satyanand, Mr. Ogilvie ought to have realized that justice demanded that he should transfer the case to some other court. On account of his failure to take this ordinary precaution his judgement would not command confidence.

Political Propaganda.

The Aj says that the condition of the country is as terrible just now as that which precedes a revolution. It has been worn out by dissensions between Hindus and Muslims, between Brahmans and non-Brahmans, between capitalists and labourers, between the rulers and the ruled, between sub-sections of castes, and between conservatives and liberals. Those who hold authority or are proud of being authorities have everywhere blocked the ways to reform. A revolution, an upheaval takes place when the way to reform is impeded. The position of the people in the country is as deplorable as that of child-widows among the Hindus. In other countries administration is carried on for public good but in India it is conducted for the good of others. The country is so distracted by the bureaucratic laws and the old shastras that there is no peace whatever among the people. When unrest exceeds all bounds in a country, then base human passions plunge it in a revolution. Whether we like it or not a revolution is staring us in the face. The efforts of the Viceroy and of the President of the Congress appear to be unable to avert this catastrophe. The future of the country can be bright, but just now it is all gloom on all sides. Shailendra Nath Ghosh writing to the paper deplores the apathy of Indian leaders towards Indian exiles in America and urges Indian public to come forward with monetary help in aid of their struggle in that country. He appeals for a sum of three lakhs of rupees to be remitted to "Indian Freedom Federation, 799, Broadway, New York." The Shakti commends the reply of the Aman Afghan to the Pioneer's remark that Afghanistan is an ally of the Bolsheviks and referring to the observation of the Afghan journal that the British think that India would do what they desire, says: Indians would never do willingly what the British desire but in the event of a war the British will surely get some recruits by threatening and intimidating people but that, too, not so easily as they got in the last war. So long as India is not free and people do not feel that the country belongs to them, what does it matter to them whether the British remain in the country or the Russians come. They would defend India with heart and soul the very day it is proclaimed that it is theirs. If the British want to own India they will have to liberate it. The Desh Bhagat says that the communal warfare of the past four years has benefited neither community and that those who regard themselves as the leaders of the country should go into temporary retirement and allow the young men an opportunity to strive for the freedom of the motherland. This breathing time will enable the generals to ponder and offer fruitful advice. It is certain that if all the young men of India determine to put a stop to internecine strife it will come to an end. The old leaders and their programme have failed and there seems no reason why new blood should not be tried. Young men have always been in the forefront in successful struggles for freedom and as suggested by Sadhu Vaswani, the young men of the country should be organized. All schools and universities should be made centres of this movement and religion should be strictly tabooed. The example of the recent struggle for independence of Italy and Egypt strengthens our conviction that if all Indian young men were to determine to break the fetters of bondage of their motherland they could accomplish in the twinkling of an eye what the labour of years and centuries has not achieved. This would be a miracle which would win the admiration of the world for Indian youths joining this noble movement. Arise, young men, believe that this is your work alone, shun all worldly pleasures, and look to your distracted mother, whose hair is dishevelled and whose body is tightly bound with fetters of serfdom and who is looking up to you with wistful eyes. Behold your mother, the suffering mother is calling you. The Shua writes:—The Indian National Club, Kabul, is a commendable fruit of the efforts of Sir (sic) Mahendra Pratap and other exiled Indians residing there. The members comprise besides truly nationalistic Indians, born Afghans also. Undoubtedly the existence of such clubs can prove of great benefit to unfortunate India. Only recently at a meeting of this club grief was expressed at the present situation in India and extreme condemnation and contempt were voiced against those Muslim goondas who incite the Muslim masses and murder Hindus in a cowardly manner. Sympathy was also extended to the relatives of those injured and killed. The existence of such a club is a great blessing in these times. How sad it is that while Kabul Muslims condemn the Indian Muslim attitude and express their sympathy with the Hindus, Indian Muslims do not change their attitude and earn the opprobrium of their own co-religionists. Indian Muslims can, if they so choose, profit by the example of their co-religionists and the members of this club and enjoy the blessings of mutual toleration. Anyway it is a great shame for Indian Muslims that though their co-religionists and neighbours are reproaching them they are so blinded by false prejudice that they do not reform their attitude. The paper refers to the appeal for pecuniary help sent by "Raja" Mahendra Pratap to the press in India and says that the painful story of his poverty would melt even a heart of stone. The Raja is a true patriot and servant of the nation who embarked on a European tour during the war of 1914, probably with the intention of finding means to extricate his country from the meshes of serfdom and Government refused him re-entry into India without stating his offence. Besides the Raja Sahib hundreds of other Indians are passing their days in exile and poverty owing either to suspicion or the selfishness of traitors. It is the duty of the Congress to find out the exact number and condition of these exiles and strongly urge upon Government to permit their return.

Indian States.

The Farishta resents the action of the Swarajya in attributing communal motives to those who are agitating against the Bharatpur State and asserts that the salaries remain undisbursed for months and crimes go untraced and the maladministration affects Hindus and Muslims equally. It is a pity that Sir Hari Kishen Kaul could not remain to reform the State but oppression and tyranny cannot triumph for long and the Swarajya will have to acknowledge its defeat.

Muslim Educational Conference.

The Leader writes : Hafiz Hidayat Husain's presidential address at the United Provinces Muslim Educational Conference at Farrukhabad was permeated by that narrow outlook which often characterizes utterances at communal gatherings. Throughout his address his viewpoint was always that of a communalist and never of an educationist. He discussed none of the real educational problems of far-reaching consequences confronting us to-day, but devoted his whole address to a formulation and presentation of the communal demands of Muslims in their educational aspect.

The Reforms.

The Aj says that Britain governs India for her own profit and that she would promote the interests of Indians only in case they do not clash with her own interests. This being the case, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's advice to carry on propaganda in England to counteract the effects of that of retired civilian governors against swaraj is superfluous. Swaraj can be won only through the principle of non-cooperation. If this is impossible, Indians should give up the dream of swaraj and should try to secure the Reforms which can be got through the favour of the officials. They should either take delight in slavery or act like true men. It is impossible to sail in two boats.

Cinematograph Committee.

The Indian Daily Telegraph while approving of the personnel of the Indian Cinematograph Enquiry Committee and recognizing the great influence and the educative value of films and their formidable power over the mass mind says : Nationalist India does not share the belief of the Government or the Imperialists that the film industry has reached a stage in India when we are justified in launching an extensive enquiry into the matter and thus wasting the time and money of the country. It is sufficiently clear that there is no demand from the country for such an enquiry and it is wanted neither by the people nor their leaders. In these circumstances naturally a suspicion lurks in the mind of the people that those who have suddenly become enthusiastic in the matter have their axes to grind. The menace of the American film and the Empire films policy are at the root of the Film Enquiry Committee and desire for serving the interests of India is a mere hoax.

Communal riots.

Al Bashir says that the most primary duty of every Government in this world is to preserve the public peace and to protect the life and property of the subjects in every way. However, during the last five years the Government of India has not succeeded in discharging this duty as is apparent from the ever-increasing communal riots. Murder, rapine, plunder, and riots increase under a Government which is either impotent or unwilling to check them for political reasons. The Government of India cannot be said to be impotent, as it has fully demonstrated its strength in combating illegal activities of an anti-Government nature. The future historian will not refer kindly to the English Government when dwelling on the communal riots. What has even the strongest partisan of the Government got to say to this that even after 150 years of rule it has not succeeded in making Indians fit to lead the lives of good citizens ? Why is it that those very Hindus and Muslims who have lived so peacefully side by side for a thousand years have become so bitterly antagonized during the last six years ? What has Government got to say to this, that though the leaders of the Arya Samaj and Hindu Sabha have repeatedly delivered mischievous speeches which have generally been followed by riots, it has not taken action against Mr. Malaviya and Dr. Moonje for their defiance of section 144 ? So long as the real motive behind this indulgence is not disclosed, Government cannot be exonerated from responsibility for the riots.

Muslim affairs.

The Medina welcomes the establishment of the new Muslim association but thinks that there is no need for it to have as one of its objects the removal of the misunderstanding between the Government and the Indian Muslims. It says that there is no such misunderstanding. The only complaint that Muslims have against the Government is that it never cares for their religious susceptibilities and can with a view to attaining imperial objects even go so far as to crush Muslim countries and leave the fate of their sacred places in undeserved hands. Referring to the appeal of the Delhi princes, the editor of the Mashriq writes that he has himself seen plays in which Roshanara has been shown as doting on Shivaji and Shambhaji. His Majesty's Government is to blame in allowing such libels to be circulated about his predecessors in India. Why are such imaginary stories invented to inflame feelings? Referring to the action of Mr. Harkare of Nasik in seeking the aid of the law to stop cow-slaughter on the ground that it violates the spirit of the Queen's Proclamation which urges religious neutrality the Haqiqat says that it is altogether impossible to restrain Muslims from cow-sacrifice by force of law.

Unity Conference.

THERE is considerable divergence of opinion regarding the resolutions passed by the Unity Conference convened by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar at Calcutta. Hindu papers generally doubt if they will be acceptable to their community, and some of them challenge the right of the Congress Committee to decide communal questions. The Leader approves the resolutions, but questions whether they will be generally followed. Continuing it says: Who is going to restrain the enthusiasts and fanatics if they deviate from civilized methods of conversion by persuasion and argument and to take them to task for doing so? Similarly, it is obvious that the problem relating to music before mosques cannot be solved by means of a formula which assumes the existence of a spirit of tolerance and reasonableness on either side which unfortunately has not been much in evidence in recent times. It is the sad lack of it which has brought things to the present pass. The resolution is lacking in sanction and is likely to leave matters very much where they are. In a subsequent issue the paper writes: While we expect general support to the resolution on conversion and re-conversion we are far from being sure if the resolution dealing with the questions of music before mosques and cow-sacrifice which have recently become inter-related will secure the same measure of agreement. The Muslim objection to Hindu processional music before mosques in an organized form, which has assumed an all-India character, is of recent origin and it has been made clear that it is a reply or a retaliation to the Hindu objection to cow-sacrifice. The resolution on the subject is likely to be interpreted by the Hindu communalists not as a compromise, but as a surrender, for it brushes aside all local customs against cow-sacrifice or slaughter. In this custom-ridden country traditional practices are sacrosanct in the eyes of the bulk of the people who dislike innovations. The Indian Daily Telegraph commends the resolutions and says: A thoroughly penetrating and effective propaganda will help considerably to popularize the resolutions. We hope the Hindus and Muslims will both rise to the occasion, inhale nationalism, and cure themselves of the communal mania in deference to the wishes of the great national doctor—the Congress—that alone can and will attend to their ills. The Aj cordially supports the resolution regarding proselytization and expresses the hope that a vigorous propaganda will be carried on to give effect to it. Proceeding it says that the best means of restoring communal unity is to formulate a comprehensive national programme acceptable to the largest number of people. The fundamental issue before them should be national construction, and not Hindu-Muslim unity. They should also realize that inter-communal unity is difficult of accomplishment under the alien Government. So long as swaraj is not established in the country no such thing is possible. Swaraj, therefore, should be the watchword of the people, and they should organize themselves for attaining it. In a subsequent issue the paper says that communal leaders will not support the resolutions of the Calcutta Unity Conference regarding music before mosques and cow-sacrifice, and that they cannot remove the communal dissensions prevailing throughout the country. The decisions of the Conference on these questions ignore the contentious issues, and hence cannot provide a satisfactory solution of the problem. Portents are all against the success of these decisions. The boycott of the Conference by communal leaders does not augur well for the fruition of its efforts. The realities of the situation preclude a settlement unless such a goal is placed before communal leaders as will induce them to forget the dissensions or consider their removal as absolutely necessary for its attainment. The Surya deplores the action of the Congress Committee in holding a Unity Conference at Calcutta, and says that though Congressmen have made so many efforts to establish inter-communal amity by favouring the Muslims and pressing the Hindus, yet their efforts have always proved futile, and instead led to the widening of the gulf. In these circumstances the country will be greatly benefited if the Congressmen give up interfering in communal politics and retire from the field like Mahatma Gandhi. The paper approves of the Viceroy's action in inviting leaders for devising measures to establish Hindu-Muslim unity, and says that the leaders should not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity. The Anand says that the resolutions on unity passed by the Congress Committee have no value so long as open-hearted efforts are not made in that direction by communal leaders. It was, therefore, absolutely necessary for the Unity Conference to invite the opinions of those leaders before getting its decisions sanctioned by the Congress. It is deplorable that the unreasonable obstinacy exhibited by the Congress Committee in this matter will lower the prestige of the Congress and afford the opponents an opportunity to carry out their designs, and there will be only a handful of men who will support its resolutions. The Haqiqat writes:—The resolutions about the cow and music questions are fair to both communities. There is a fear, however, that those who kept aloof from the meeting will declare the proposals to be unworkable and one-sided, and will work against their general acceptance by the country. It is, therefore, necessary that the proposals should be ratified by the Madras Congress, where all parties will be represented, before the country is asked to act upon them.

Attacks on Hindus.

Referring to the rejection of Abdul Rashid's appeal by the Privy Council the Aj says:—Though we had previously recommended transportation for Abdul Rashid we cannot venture to do so now in view of the several outrages following so quickly one after another in the wake of Swami Shraddhanand's murder and the deplorable attitude evinced by Muslim papers in regard to them. It is more important to save innocent persons from falling victim to the secret dagger of assassins than to save a sinful murderer from the gallows. Abdul Rashid's crime was most atrocious, but the extenuating circumstance in his favour was that it was not committed for private ends, but was inspired by a false religious teaching. Fanaticism has now produced several Abdul Rashids, and it has become necessary for the preservation of society that the extreme penalty of the law should be inflicted on such offenders. Commenting on the passing of death sentences on the murderers of Swami Shraddhanand, Manak Chand, and Tek Chand the Pratap says:—The offence of these men is not so serious as of those who preach that the enemies of their religion deserve to be killed. Such men are also extremely dishonest inasmuch as they incite ignorant people to soil their hands with blood, but keep themselves at a safe distance from such acts. It is a strange perversion of religion that, in order to save Abdul Rashid, he should be made out a ghazi at one time and a lunatic at another. The Haqiqat says that the unfortunate Abdul Rashid was not a habitual criminal or notorious dacoit that he deserved death. The fact that he was shown to be insane during the inquiry impels every man to plead to Government for mercy for him. It is to be hoped that Government will consider this plea specially when even the followers of Swami Shraddhanand are not much opposed to the exercise of clemency in his case. Replying to Lala Lajpat Rai's charge against Muslims that they have, either through extreme sorrow and anger, or under the influence of Islamic teachings, embarked upon a campaign of murdering Hindus and thereby marred the prospects of Hindu-Muslim unity, the Medina says that the Hindus, having for a long time employed all their resources against Muslims, abused their ancestors, kings and prophets and insulted their religion and sacred book in the Press and on the platform, and having also oppressed Muslims by the shuddhi and sangathan movements and through their money-lenders it is no wonder that Muslims have now lost all patience. In these circumstances it was only natural for them to have taken recourse to the might of their arms and they have done so although in a wrong and entirely improper manner.

Political Propaganda.

Emphasizing the need for the organization of peasantry the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The peasant presents a great possibility and can be a source of tremendous power to the national movement. He ought to have been the bed-rock and should constitute the man-power of the great movement. As a matter of fact, a national movement in which the peasant plays no part is a sham and chimera. During the days of the non-cooperation movement the value of the co-operation of the peasants was realized and an attempt was made in the direction of organizing a kisan movement. The leaders and the educated youth of the country should concentrate themselves on the education of the peasant. He is ground down, but is seething with discontent which contains the seed of disaster. It is a smouldering fire. The Aj deplores the evil tendency of Indians to look up to the "bureaucracy" in every matter. It is an obvious truth, says the paper, that swaraj cannot be got for begging and yet they pay no heed to it. Swaraj being their birth-right they should not beg for it, but should demand it with the sanction of the power of the people behind it. Swaraj is secured by strength, by the self-sacrifice of selfless heroes. The demand of Congressmen for swaraj in the Councils is nothing short of mendicancy unsupported as it is by the strength of the people. It is because of the lack of self-confidence and self-help that Indians have come to look up to the bureaucracy even for the solution of social and communal problems, to say nothing of national emancipation. This is the height of moral weakness. The leaders now only keep an eye on the movements of the Viceroy and other authorities and move heaven and earth in speculating upon their significance. They no longer demand swaraj, but go to the Councils with tears in their eyes to beg for one handful of reforms. The Oudh Akhbar reproduces the resolutions recently passed by the Indian National Club, Kabul, and appeals to Indians of all political parties and communities to put an end to the present baneful internecine strife. A conference of Hindu and Muslim business men should be called to bring about unity, but leaders and religious enthusiasts should be studiously excluded from it. Once unity is achieved the work of the emancipation of India should be pushed forward.

Viceroy's Invitations.

There has been considerable speculation in the Press as to the object of the Viceroy's invitations to prominent political leaders. Extremist papers are of opinion that the consultations can serve no useful purpose. The Pratap writes:—Some say that the Viceroy will confer on Hindu-Muslim disturbances, while others think that there will be some talk on the question of the Royal Commission. What need is there of talking on Hindu-Muslim relations? There has been a great talk over it already. Now there is need of some substantial work. We think that if the Government of India so desires much can be done in this connexion. Its system of administration can never allow different communities of the country to unite. The policy of divide and rule is in evidence everywhere. The Government of India's seal has been and continues to be impressed on communalism and the policy of division. Its policy is extremely mysterious in the matter of communal disturbances. If, therefore, His Excellency Lord Irwin wants to solve the problem he should place the heart and head of his Government under sound treatment. The question of the Royal Commission is altogether in his own hands. What advice will poor Mr. Gandhi offer in that connexion? Other leaders will surely say something, but we, the common folk, should not build any hopes on it, nor treat the British Parliament or its commissions as an arbiter of our destiny. If this Commission gives us something we should rest assured that it will leave us still worse.

Hindu-Muslim Relations.

The Najat complains that since 1921 the Aryas and Sangathanists have made it their business to fan the fire of communal discord and to secure Hindu domination over Muslims. The fact is that they still publish filthy literature and always urge that Hindus should remove the defect of physical inferiority from which they suffer as compared with Muslims and should thus complete their dominance over their enemies. When disturbances result from such false propaganda the Hindus throw the whole blame on Muslims and pose as aggrieved persons. The Muslims suffered at Palasipara, Bettiah, Nagpur and Jubbulpore, but it is they again who are being given a bad name. All this betokens an organized and terrible conspiracy against Muslims in which even lying and deceit are resorted to. The Muslims should not descend to such black-heartedness, but they should adopt defensive measures and try to be self-contained. If Muslims were to acquire discrimination their defensive measures would surely affect the backbone of the enemy. Economic boycott is more effective than violent retaliation, and Muslims should patronise shop-keepers of their own religion. Hindus exalt into a hero any co-religionist who has been attacked by a Muslim and thus create feelings of vengeance among his co-religionists. This is bound to lead to the murder of Muslims. A number of lives will be sacrificed at the altar of the present propaganda of the Arya Sangathanist leaders in the name of self-defence and peace. Muslims have always condemned attacks on Hindus, but the Hindus have never reciprocated this attitude. Unity cannot come from one side. In fact, as the Muslims are weak and the Hindus strong unity between them is out of the question. The best course, therefore, for Muslims is to remove all their weaknesses.

Muslim Affairs.

The Haqiqat says that by the way in which the Agra University has overlooked Muslim interests it has really earned the title of the new Hindu University bestowed on it by the Aziz-i-Hind. Muslims are to be found only in name in the Senate and Executive Committee. In the governing body there is only one Muslim to thirty non-Muslims. When Mr. Kichlu was selected for this work our apprehensions had been roused as his anti-Muslim leanings are very notorious throughout the province. In the course of a leading article on Mustafa Kemal's famous speech the Medina deplores that the Kemalists are discarding religion for the sake of economic welfare and says that Kemal Pasha's charge that Indian Muslims do not understand religion should serve as a warning to them, for they have been in the habit of looking to Turkey and Afghanistan for their welfare and have thereby weakened themselves with the result that they are, on the one hand, being ruled by a nation which is sucking the life-blood of Muslim countries, and on the other falling a prey to the greed of their Hindu friends who had once been ruled by them for generations. If Indian Muslims can even now shake off all their weaknesses they can not only command respect themselves, but can also save the Turks from impiety and heresy. The Haqiqat says that besides the demolition of a mosque by the Raja of Shahpur about which Khwaja Hasan Nizami is agitating the Muslim Outlook reports that the Nadiad State has forbidden Muslims to slaughter goats. Excesses are still being perpetrated on Muslims in Indore and in the Puddukottah State, they have to pay a special tax if they want exemption from the work of taking the carriages of Hindus to temples on festival days. All these were sufficiently painful, but now comes the astounding news from Tamkohi estate that the beards of certain Muslims were forcibly shaved, their dead were cremated according to Hindu rites and they were restrained from performing the ceremony of Nikah (Muslim marriage sacrament) and such other terrible crimes are being committed. It is a great pity that Government does not turn its attention to the stoppage of such oppressions which are striking at the root of peace and order in the country.

Provincial Muslim Educational Conference.

Commenting on the presidential address of the Provincial Muslim Educational Conference the Aligarh Mail writes:—Hafiz Hidayat Husain's address is a mine of facts and figures relating to our educational condition which portray how the progress of our education is crippled by causes for which we are not to be blamed. . . What is then the moral which we draw from Hafiz Hidayat Husain's timely reminder of the hindrances that lie in the way of our educational advancement? The moral is plainly this that it is almost impossible for us to progress educationally to the fullest extent unless we Muslims are properly and separately represented on the district boards, the High School and Intermediate Examination Board, and the governing bodies of the Allahabad and Agra Universities. The clear demand, therefore, of the Muslims of these provinces from the Government—and it must accede to it if it is just and benevolent—is that communal representation with communal electorates should be introduced in local bodies and educational institutions because common representation and joint electorates have made them a safe and holy preserve for the Hindus.

Indian States.

The Hamdam says that the recent murders, inordinate delays in payment of salaries, and the general dissatisfaction with the administration of the present ruler of Bharatpur necessitate the appointment of an independent commission of enquiry. The Haqiqat publishes a manifesto by Khwaja Hasan Nizami, in which he states that the Raja of Shahpur has demolished a mosque and refuses to rebuild it, but instead his Arya supporters have asked for Government action against him (Khwaja) on the ground that his agitation is likely to disturb the public peace. The Khwaja goes on to say that Muslims cannot be intimidated by such threats when their mosques are concerned and urges them to hold meetings and send messages of protest to the Agent to the Governor-General, Rajputana.

Provincial Conference of Indian Christian Association.

The Leader writes:—At a time when the atmosphere is surcharged with the infectious germs of narrow communalism it is indeed heartening to notice the leaders of the Indian Christian community displaying a breadth of outlook and a sturdy spirit of nationalism which deserves to be emulated by other minority communities, particularly the Muslims. The speeches delivered by Mr. P. N. Dass, the chairman of the Provincial Conference of the Indian Christian Association held at Gorakhpur, and Mr. J. M. David, its president, will be read with high appreciation by every nationalist Indian. The president's attitude of self-reliance and self-confidence on the question of the appointment of Indian Christians to the public services is in strong contrast to that of those who fight shy of open competition and rely upon the special privileges and favours which only weaken those on whom they are conferred and are incompatible with public interest.

Hindu Marriage Bill.

The Press representing the orthodox section of Hindus unanimously opposes the Hindu Marriage Bill, while that representing the advanced section whole-heartedly supports it. The Leader writes:—Mr. Harbilas Sarda's Bill relating to child marriage is such a modest and cautious measure that it seems to be surprising that there should be any opposition to its enactment. If at all, the Bill only errs on the side of moderation and can by no stretch of language be called a radical measure of reform. The Dharma Rakshak exhorts the Hindus to urge the Viceroy to drop the Hindu Marriage Bill and condemns the action of Mr. Harbilas Sarda in fixing the minimum marriageable age-limit of girls at twelve on the ground that according to Hindu authorities girls should be married before puberty.

Reforms.

The Desh Bhagat warns Indians to expect little of the forthcoming Royal Commission on Reforms as an intensive anti-Indian propaganda is being waged in the British press in which Miss Mayo's book looms particularly large. Indian leaders should boycott the Commission and educate Indian public opinion regarding it.

Vegetable Ghee.

The Agra Akhbar attributes the spread of diseases of the respiratory and digestive systems to the introduction of vegetable ghee in India, and says that it has a highly deleterious effect on the health of Indians. It urges that its sale should be stopped immediately by the levy of prohibitive duties.

Reforms.

Indian newspapers vehemently protest against the exclusion of Indians from the Statutory Commission and some of them, including Liberal papers, urge a complete boycott. The Pioneer heartily welcomes the appointment of the Commission, on the lines long advocated in its columns, and endorses the Viceroy's appeal for the creation of a friendly and trusting atmosphere, in which to discuss the problems with which it will be faced. The paper, however, regrets that in view of the vital importance of the issues at stake, the composition of the Commission is not one—with the exception of the chairman—to merit universal acceptance on the ground of the position of its members in British public life. The Leader writes:—"Let us state here and now, unequivocally and unreservedly, that we regard this long-looked for Statutory Commission as it is constituted, as being both an injury and an insult to India. It is a calculated affront to Indian opinion—to Indian intelligence as well as to Indian self-respect. We declare our want of confidence in the Commission. It is our considered opinion that our countrymen should have nothing to do with it. We will exhort them every time to ignore this Commission, not to go anywhere near it, and instead, to apply their moral energy to a strong and sustained agitation, of course principally in our own country, but also in theirs, for the early statutory recognition of India's indefeasible right to govern herself. If India is to regain her lost place among the nations she will owe that consummation not to Birkenheads and Irwins and Simons of the British race, but to their own active and manly and persistent patriotism, scornful of all petty considerations, marked by undeviating righteousness, and sanctified by the blessings of the Most High. Let our countrymen resolve in the crisis of their fate that they will lead dedicated lives in the service of the Motherland and they shall have the satisfaction of seeing their efforts crowned with success." Referring to the Viceroy's "apologia" the paper says:—The fact is that an outrageously unsatisfactory Commission has been set up, the conclusion has virtually been prejudged against Indians. India's hopes have been dashed to the ground in the most inconsiderate manner imaginable. In the face of this selfish and insolent fact what will Viceregal explanations avail? The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The veil is lifted. The fatal fact is unfolded. The way in which His Excellency the Viceroy puts a long and sweet preface to the bitter announcement is an index more of his shrewdness than of his sympathy with our aspirations. Indians will have little or no voice in determining the nature of the Reforms that are to shape the destiny of their country. Can India expect anything substantial from such a Commission? The Tory Government has committed a serious blunder. It has sown the wind and must be prepared to reap the whirlwind. There is not the least doubt now that the Commission will have to begin its work in an atmosphere charged with suspicion, distrust and discontent. It is of the utmost importance that an all-parties' conference should meet at a central place in the near future and present the demands of the nation to England irrespective of what the Parliamentary Commission may say or do. The Aj writes:—If Indians had power there would have been no need for them to demand their representation on the Commission. With the subsidence of the non-cooperation movement their newly-acquired power is gone and now it is no good whining. If the humiliation to which they are being subjected to-day should serve them as an eye-opener and they should seek power within themselves even the evil would be productive of good. They will be well advised to leave the Commission alone and cultivate self-reliance. If they succeed in this there would be no need for the Commission itself and in keeping with the British character rights would come to them of themselves and afterwards Parliament would ratify them. They should acquire rights and the Parliament would acquiesce in them soon after. This is the only way to salvation and its sole means is non-violent non-cooperation. Had it been the object of the British authorities to benefit India, there would not have been so much bungling in connexion with the Commission. If they had been prepared to give further administrative rights they would not have been at so much pains to save the Commission from the contagion of Indian members. Their love of empire and their pride as masters have become so much exaggerated that the very idea of Indians participating in any attempt to determine the future government of their country has become intolerable to them. This is naked imperialism. Indeed British Imperialists want to deprive this country even of manly spirit and as they possess power they will do so. In fact might is right and the weak cannot deserve to obtain justice. The United Provinces Governor's recent disallowance of the adjourment motion in the local Council over the question of the prosecution of a sub-inspector shows that India is governed by brute force. Indians should first become men and then demand their rights. If they are to secure their rights they should give proof of manly spirit. No change can be brought about in the existing conditions unless the Councils and the Assembly are boycotted, and the leaders devote themselves to the task of preparing the people for civil disobedience. In a subsequent issue the paper says:—The Commission is a down-right insult to the self-respect of India. It remains to be seen what reply she gives to it. The Leader of Allahabad deserves to be congratulated for its sound advice in the matter. We wish that all political parties in the country would combine on this occasion and boycott the Commission and thereby make it plain to the imperialistic authorities that for India too there is a limit to putting up with insults and that she cannot go beyond it. The Anand says that as it is possible that the Muslims and landlords may not participate in the boycott of the Royal Commission people should not decide to boycott it until all are unanimous in doing so. The Hamdam writes:—India had no voice in the selection of the personnel of the Statutory Commission and Indians will be rigidly excluded from it. They are only wanted to accord their silent support to it and to proffer advice when required. They are to be treated as mere patients who are to describe the symptoms of their disease and trust to the doctor for arriving at a proper diagnosis and prescribing the right remedy. If they do not close their ranks and lodge an emphatic protest, the designs of London are bound to succeed. Not to say of Nationalists, even Liberals and Moderates cannot accept the composition of the Commission. If Indians have any regard for their national honour they should organize unanimous demonstrations of protest regardless of political or communal differences and should make it clear that decisions arrived at in defiance of public opinion can never prove acceptable. The modus operandi proposed for the Commission not only denies to Indians the right of self-determination, but further excludes from consultations such prominent Indian leaders as are outside the legislatures. It is also feared that the representatives of the legislatures will be pro-Government men elected by the votes of the official members supported by the reactionaries. Nationalist members have always been excluded by Government from committees and it is at present particularly emboldened by the political and communal feuds prevailing in the country. The Haqiqat says:—Howsoever divided Indians might be and howsoever Lord Irwin might argue Indians cannot sacrifice their national interests by accepting a purely Parliamentary Commission from which their representatives are rigidly excluded and whose sole business would be to promote British interests. It is unfortunate that Hindu-Muslim disturbances have disorganized the nation and it is no wonder that Government has therefore been emboldened to appoint a purely Parliamentary Commission. It was a foregone conclusion that the growing estrangement between Hindus and Muslims would gravely injure national interests and it is only the expected that has happened. The more fratricidal strife will flourish in the country, the greater will be the loss to common national interests. It is simply ridiculous on the part of Messrs. Lajpat Rai and Malaviyaji to fly into a rage over the Commission after the discord-breeding resolutions of the Aryan Congress. We have just now only to bewail the composition of the Commission, but if this mutual breaking of heads continues the report of the Commission will be still more disappointing and we must be prepared beforehand for it. No one can forecast the future course of events, but it seems that after a protest people would prefer to make the most out of the Commission despite all its flaws. The Liberals at least will tend towards this way. As for the Congress it has been insisting on a boycott from before as in principle it does not relish subordination to Parliament in national matters and will not be prepared to forego its demand for a Round Table Conference and cooperate with the Commission. Anyway the pill is bitter and it will go down the throats of Indians with great difficulty.

Unity Conference.

The Muslim press warmly commends the Calcutta proposals, but fears lest they should be wrecked by the opposition of Sangathanists who, it thinks, are not anxious for peace. Hindu papers generally continue to oppose the resolutions as detrimental to Hindu interests. Welcoming the action of the All-India Congress Committee in accepting the resolutions of the Calcutta Unity Conference, the Pratap says that the resolutions passed in the Conference lay too much stress on the rights of various communities. They will enable the Muslims to sacrifice cows and the Hindus to play music before mosques in places where they have not been able to do so up till now. In the existing conditions it is not unlikely that such new demands may be made and new causes of friction arise. The Abhyudaya wonders how those who call themselves Hindus could admit the right of the Muslims to sacrifice cows in all places. It regards the resolution on cow-sacrifice as a triumph of the Muslims inasmuch as it has placed on equal footing the question of cow-sacrifice and the new-fangled demand for the stoppage of music before mosques and observes that unity can be lasting only when it is based on justice and not on the desire to please any particular community. Congressmen should remember that by applying section 144 and other sections the authorities have shown more zeal in stopping music before mosques than the Muslims themselves and that the mere passing of resolutions on the playing of music will not deter them from doing so. Moreover, the language of this resolution is vague while the right to allow Muslims to sacrifice cows within their houses will widen the scope for mischief. The Garhwali views with suspicion the decision of the Conference specially in view of its support by Maulana Muhammad Ali who up to this time had been advising his co-religionists to murder the kafirs and never to make friends with them. It says that the decision of the Conference on the question of cow-sacrifice and music before mosques cannot be acceptable to any Hindu or for that matter to any sensible and impartial individual as it is an encroachment on the rights of the Hindus in the name of communal unity. The Gyan Shakti says that though peace has been established in the country so far as conferences and resolutions are concerned real peace and swaraj are still far off from India. In their heart the Muslims do not want peace even now. The only way to establish peace is for the Government to make use of force to suppress the communal unrest. Al Khalil is glad that the Calcutta Conference has succeeded where the Simla Conference has failed. A national instead of a communal atmosphere pervaded the deliberations at Calcutta. The conversion resolution, if honestly acted upon, will surely eliminate discord. Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar deserves to be congratulated on the cow and music resolutions also which are sure to be acceptable to the Hindu masses. The fact that the resolutions were passed unanimously shows that Mr. Malaviya, Dr. Moonje and Lala Lajpat Rai alone are standing in the way of reconciliation. They see in a compromise the waning of Hindu communal enthusiasm and the shattering of their sangathanist dreams and this is why they wrecked every unity conference and kept away from Calcutta. Had the Hindus at Calcutta no regard for the cow or were they unaware of the religious importance of music? No, the only difference is that this trio does not want peace while other Hindus are anxious for it. The settlement of these questions opens out bright prospects as there is now every likelihood of other questions also being successfully tackled by the Congress. The Hamdam is sorry that following the refusal of Messrs. Malaviya, Moonje and Lajpat Rai to join the Calcutta Unity Conference, local Hindu Sabhas at various places have begun to pass resolutions protesting against its proposals declaring the Hindu Sabha to be more representative than the Congress. It says that the present mentality of the Hindu sangathanists will stand in the way of a reconciliation specially in the prevailing vitiated atmosphere. Muslims cannot be deprived of their rights so long as they are not wiped out as a community and such provocative propaganda can only mar the political progress of the country. The Rahnuma applauds the action of "the most respected political organization in the country, the Congress," in clearing the clouds of despondency that had settled over India after the failure of the Simla Unity Conference. Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar has shown himself to be a true and sincere patriot and deserved to be congratulated on his promptness in dealing with the unity question. The Conference had the sympathy of all Hindu and Muslim leaders barring Mr. Malaviya, Dr. Moonje and Lala Lajpat Rai who have their own axe to grind. Besides, as said by Mr. Goswami, there is a large body of Hindus which refuses to own allegiance to the Hindu Maha Sabha and the proposals passed are such as will win the approval of all Hindus and Muslims who have even an iota of reasonableness in them and will, if seriously acted upon, eliminate friction. The Congress should now turn its attention towards the composing of political differences also, so that an enduring peace may be ensured. The Nizam-i-Alam says that the proposals are in every way commendable and if honestly carried out will automatically end the existing tension and inaugurate an era of peace and goodwill. The Aftab writes:—The compromise is the best and most reasonable, imaginable and the gentlemen assembled at Calcutta deserve the gratitude of the country for their masterly handling of the vexed questions of music and cow. It is to be hoped that those leaders who did not join the Calcutta Conference will not pursue any subversive propaganda and thus nullify the present efforts for peace. Anyone who strikes a discordant note at this juncture will be regarded as an enemy not only of his community but also of the country. Government also should legislate on the lines of the Calcutta resolutions so as to ensure their uniform acceptance throughout the country. Cow-killing cannot be stopped and Hindus should not grudge their Muslim compatriots a little more freedom in the matter specially when they also are free to play music before mosques.

The Aryan Congress.

Muslim papers strongly resent the resolutions passed by the Aryan Congress and regard them as a challenge and a warning to the Muslim community. Referring to the resolution regarding the enrolment of volunteers and collection of defence fund and satyagrah in connexion with the restrictions placed on Arya Samaj religious processions by local authorities the Leader writes:—The resolution should convey a warning to those officials who have been paying scant regard to the legitimate rights of the Hindus and treating their protests with virtual contempt, and also to the Government which has been supporting the action of the officials concerned. The Aj is satisfied with the resolution of the Aryan Conference regarding civil disobedience not because it is wholly practicable but because it betokens manliness on the part of the Aryas. It says that if it is a question of fight they should fight like men. It is no good going to the authorities for the vindication of social and religious rights. The right is his who can protect it. Muslims gain their point because local authorities cannot dare interfere with their real or imaginary rights. If Hindus too become men and become ready to defend their rights, there is no reason why local authorities should oppose them everywhere. If both the sides become equally strong the authorities will be forced to accord equal treatment to all. By taking the decision regarding civil disobedience the Aryan Conference has declared war and also formed a committee to carry it on. There is, however, no doubt that it does not want to be aggressive. Its only object is self-defence. It is also clear that it has been forced by circumstances to adopt such a course. The Anand remarks:—Although we do not agree with certain decisions of the Conference yet we cannot help expressing our gratification at the ideal forbearance displayed by the Arya Samajists in the face of grave provocation. The Conference has exposed the hollowness of the charge of quarrelsomeness levelled against the Arya Samajists

by a few interested persons. It was justified in rejecting the agreement entered into with the Muslims by a handful of Swarajists without previous consultation with Hindu representative bodies. The demand of the Conference that the Government should make an earnest endeavour to unearth the conspiracy behind the murders of Hindu leaders and institute proceedings against Muslim firebrands is quite reasonable and it is the duty of the Government to realize its responsibility and take steps to allay the fears of the Arya Samajists. The Hamdam is surprised at the discord-breeding spirit of the resolutions passed by the Subjects Committee of the Aryan Congress and regrets that they will seriously prejudice the good results achieved by the Calcutta Unity Conference. It cannot conduce to an amicable atmosphere to level baseless and improper charges of conspiracy against Muslims or to lay the whole blame on their shoulders at a time when every party recognizes the supreme need of unity for Indian progress. None but those who are obsessed by a particularly biassed mentality will welcome these resolutions. It can only accentuate communal bitterness to question the representative character of the Calcutta Unity Conference. It is, however, to be hoped that Hindu mass opinion will evince an improved mentality in the open session of the Congress and will not prove a stumbling block in the path of national re-union. We all along thought that the Hindu Sabha would accept the Calcutta proposals and the Aryan Congress would at least desist from resisting them. The Haqiqat says that during the last two or three years a number of Hindu organizations have come into existence which although bearing different names have a common object which is to accentuate Hindu-Muslim differences in the name of Hindu sangathan. The speeches made at the meetings of these organizations are generally very offensive and inflammatory and their main object is always to rouse the feelings of Hindus against Muslims. The Delhi Congress also had the same object in view and it has succeeded in its object. The Muslims are not at all to be blamed if they take the resolutions passed at the Congress as an ultimatum to them. The resolutions are sufficiently offensive and provocative. In the face of these resolutions it is futile to talk of unity. The sangathanist Hindu leaders have shown their mentality by their attitude towards the Calcutta Unity Conference as well as by passing the resolutions at the Arya Congress. No more proof is needed of their anxiety for Hindu-Muslim unity.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Hindu Gazette says that though the Hindus are aware how vigorously the Muslims are boycotting them they are unable to sever relations with them. This is why on getting opportunity the Muslims assault them. Most of them even abduct their daughters and daughters-in-law. In view of all this it is very dangerous to have dealings with Muslims. Every Hindu should completely sever his relations with them. Al Khalil writes:—In 1923 Mr. Malaviya had advised Hindu ladies to bear pistols and now in the year of grace 1927 Mr. Moonje is repeating the same lesson at Amraoti. This gentleman addressed a number of meetings in that town within a day. At one he counselled students to become physically strong and powerful so as to be able to defend the honour of their families and to protect their homes and country and to acquire martial spirit. To ladies his advice was that they should learn horsemanship and lathi-play and become fit to defend their lives and honour and should undergo systematic physical training. Addressing a common meeting on that self-same day he observed:—" Muslims kept aloof from the Congress in the beginning and joined it for self-interest when the Khilafat question arose. Muslims are opposed to unity. So long as the custom of pollution by touch persists among Hindus, unity is unattainable." Speaking at the Arya Samaj Mandir at Bombay on that very day Swami Vicharanand remarked that if one crore Hindu youths between the ages of 18 and 22 were to become prepared for defence, Muslim attacks would cease at once. Do Government, its tyrannical police and powerful officials realize what the aims and objects of these terrible teachings and exhortations are? Why are these lessons being inculcated? What is the purpose of these incitements and preparations for war? Are all these counsels and activities meant for opposing the Muslims? Or is there any conflict in prospect with the English or some other race in India? Can Government or any Hindu leader tell us whether any Muslim leader also had made such speeches on any occasion and exhorted his people for combat and military preparedness in such unambiguous, clear and explicit language? Is there no law, no statute and no punishment for Mr. Moonje and Mr. Vicharanand? All this teaching is imparted in a manner as if a great war is in sight. "Become warlike. Learn lathi-play. Prepare one crore youths. Muslims do not want unity. Union is unattainable till the removal of untouchability." What is the spirit animating such observations. Are Moonje and others of his ilk really determined to wipe out Muslims and to foment civil war in India? Such are the activities, the ambitions and the extravagance of Hindus but still the blame is laid on the shoulders of Muslims and Lala Lajpat Rai goes about accusing the sons of unitarianism. We boldly proclaim that these are not speeches but an open declaration of war on behalf of the sangathanists. Every word of the above excerpts clearly indicates the aspirations, mischievous ambitions and conspiracies of the Hindus and they seem bent on ruining Muslims. Not only men but even students, youths and women are openly exhorted to be armed and prepared. Will Government let us know what has become of the Indian Penal Code, in what nook has its police hidden its head and what are its officials doing or whether they are still ignorant of these things? If such conditions persist for some time longer and these mischief-making, aggressive and discord-breeding Hindu leaders are not dealt with, then if not to-day surely to-morrow these self-same sangathanists will make rivers of blood flow on every patch of Indian soil. Civil war is bound to ensue and for this the Hindus are most fully prepared. It is the duty of Government to adopt preventive measures at the earliest moment and to set its legal machinery into motion, otherwise the least negligence will spread ruin in the country and India will be doomed. Those leaders also who have the good of the country at heart should turn their attention this way. The Rohilkhand Gazette writes:—The Arya Samajists may call the Satyartha Prakash their religious or revealed scripture, but so long as such literature is not suppressed it is difficult to improve the existing atmosphere in India. After Swami Dayanand's death there were interpolations in the book attacking Islam, Sikhism and Christianity and their harsh language was attributed to Dayanandji. A book to which offensive matter is added after the author's death, while the interpolator's identity is kept concealed, deserves either to be expurgated or to be proscribed. The life history of the Prophet of Islam shows how excellent his attitude was towards other faiths and the Quran nowhere enjoins the killing of unbelievers unless the enemies of the faith launch any attack. It was the moral excellence of Islam that attracted other races and they are living in peace and prosperity in Islamic countries. On the contrary the instructions contained in the Satyartha Prakash about treatment of enemies only need to be perused to have their nature laid bare. Neither is Satyartha Prakash a work sanctified by centuries nor does its author claim to be an inspired personage. It is a human book and its proscription can establish peace and order in the country.

Attacks on Hindus.

Muslim papers continue to protest against the charge of conspiracy levelled by the Hindu press in connexion with the attacks on Hindus. The Rohilkhand Gazette says:—Thousands of Muslims were massacred like goats and sheep in the Katarpur and Shahabad riots but it never occurred to any Muslim to conceive the idea of an organized conspiracy, but since Swami Shraddhanand's murder the Aryas always strike the tune of conspiracy. Whenever any Hindu happens to be injured or killed by a Muslim, Government is asked to unearth it. This outcry has led to an addition to the secret police at Lahore. While at this we must say that all these efforts by the police will prove fruitless and if no conspiracy is traced the entire cost of the police should be realized from the Arya Samaj so that this tune of conspiracy may cease. In another article the same paper writes:—Islam lays down that it is improper and highly sinful to kill people of other races so long as the Imam or the Muslim King does not command. The terrible sentences inflicted on Muslim assailants at Lahore have been viewed by Muslims with wonder and surprise. Some open-hearted leaders of the community have remarked in a suppressed tone that it is a sad mistake to countenance such attacks, Undoubtedly violence is against the teachings of Islam. Muslims should submit with patience to the excesses of the Arya Samaj. But why is no notice taken of this attitude of the Swarajist papers that put a religious complexion even on assaults actuated by personal enmity? What injustice is this that ever since Swami Shraddhanand's murder Muslims are charged with a deep-laid conspiracy and this chimera is made to worry the police needlessly? If police inquiries fail to find a clue to a conspiracy and the murders are not proved to be due to religious provocation, will the Arya Samaj offer to pay a fine? Al Khalil writes:—We have more than once condemned murderous attacks and have said that they were the acts of individuals. We have also warned the Hindus not to attribute them to a widespread conspiracy and thus rouse feelings of vengeance among members of their community and lead to attacks by certain short-sighted and excitable Hindus on Muslims. This has actually happened and besides mass attacks reports are now to hand of individual attacks also. The painful and cowardly murder of M. Alim-ul-lah Khan, station master, took place first and he was killed while he was asleep in his room not with any other instrument but with a gun. This was followed by the murder of a Muslim woman in a train and as her ornaments were not rifled it was surely not the work of a thief. Now comes the news from Bihar of the murder of a famous merchant of the Muzaffarnagar district, Mr. Muhammad Ismail, and here again with a gun. It is noteworthy in connexion with these incidents that fire-arms were invariably used which put a serious complexion on the matter. It appears that these attacks were premeditated and the murderers used firearms to make them effective so that a single attack might prove fatal and the victim might not be able to utter a word. What a display of conspiracy, teaching and premeditation! How cleverly and successfully is the work being done! We appeal to Government to make special efforts to trace and punish the murderers. The police is not taking particular pains in the matter and if even the least negligence is shown there would be a regular campaign of murders throughout the length and breadth of the country and the poor Muslim subjects of His Majesty would be involved in new agonies. Bihar and the United Provinces are the self-same provinces which have witnessed Arrah and Katarpur and Government should not forget this fact.

The United Provinces Legislative Council.

Referring to the disallowance of the adjournment motion of Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant in the last meeting of the provincial Council the Aj says:—The Governor has the right to deprive the Council of its liberty and the swarajists, too, have the right to leave it. Both the parties exercised their respective rights. But who triumphed? A sub-inspector who instituted a false case of defamation against a patriot is still under the protection of official favour. In order to save time the Governor even insulted the elected representatives of the tax-payers. What can such a Council do to protect the rights of the people? What is the use of entering into such Councils? Is it not more consistent with self-respect not to enter them at all, than leave them for a day on being insulted? The very existence of the Council is futile if it cannot protect the people from the oppression of the police and make it the true custodian of peace. The paper remarks that as the Government commands majority in the local Council the very useful resolution of Mr. Sampurnanand regarding the transferred subjects was rejected. This means, says the paper, that though there are transferred subjects by way of show officials carry things all their own way there too, and that though the Council is responsible for these subjects the bureaucracy will continue to make itself comfortable in them. The Pratap says that the proposed legislation in connexion with the sale of Naik girls can do no particular good so long as education is not spread among the Naik community. It might do some good to the Naik girls, but at the same time may react on the girls of other communities who may be sold instead. The intention of the law can, therefore, never be fulfilled so long as it is not amended so as to prevent all girls under eighteen from taking to prostitution.

Reforms.

The personnel of the Statutory Commission is the chief topic of comment. Hindu papers in general regard the exclusion of Indians as a national insult and advocate a boycott of the Commission. Muslim papers are sharply divided, but most of them are opposed to the proposed boycott and some even approve of the non-inclusion of Indians in view of the communal tension and the "anti-Muslim attitude of Hindu politicians." The Leader, which is most assiduous and persistent in the advocacy of boycott, writes:—Stale platitude and sickening cant—that was Mr. Baldwin's lengthy reference to India in his Guildhall speech. The most patient and charitable of men might well turn away with disgust from the amount of unctuous rectitude of which this genius of a Premier right honourably delivered himself. If India wants the introduction of full responsible government in the provinces and of responsibility in the whole sphere of internal civil administration in the Central Government, it is possible, according to no less authoritative an officer than the Prime Minister of Britain, for the Commission and Parliament to bring about a reversion to the ante-Montagu period. And who can say that any day under such a government as now holds sway, the possibility may not become a dread probability? The prospect is dreary, the position is intolerable. In the circumstances the most sensible thing that it is open to Indian patriots to do is to decide to leave this farcical Commission severely alone and to concentrate upon an agitation in the whole country bigger, more determined, more purposeful than any that the British Government have had to confront since 70 years ago India passed under the direct government of the Crown. The paper vehemently criticizes Sir John Simon's letter to the president of the Spen Valley Liberal Association and writes:—Sir John Simon's letter is a most disappointing production and does no credit to his intelligence or knowledge of affairs. He has merely done what Lord Rosebery declined to do—he has burnt a candle in the pale shrine of platitude. He will find, when he comes on his unwelcome mission, that Indians who are of consequence will have nothing to do with his team, will not "co-operate" with it as they cannot in honour do so, will show that they do not trust it and have no use for it. He and his team will find an India sullen and resentful because she has been grossly insulted. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—We welcome this Parliamentary Commission as a boon particularly in view of the fact that it gives us all a violent shake and opens our eyes as to which way lies our national emancipation, and promises to ensure unassailable unity among all political parties. Let India seize this opportunity and give His Majesty's Government a bit of her mind. Nothing can establish more definitely than this Parliamentary Commission that swaraj does not lie in the gift of an alien nation but has got to be evolved by India herself. We hope, Indian leaders will come out of their grooves, confer together and frame a programme of national reconstruction to revitalize the country.

The Aligarh Mail says:—We have got the Commission that we communal fools and quarrelling lunatics, Hindus and Muslims, deserve. If we were a united people, we could have reasonably claimed seats on the Commission. Now that we are only a congeries of warring communities, we cannot but be tried on the charge that we are unfit for self-government because we are neither homogeneous nor possess a democratic sense in our behaviour with each other. The British Government is holding our trial. We must stand in the dock and as communalist criminals give our evidence before the judges of the Commission.

The Aj writes :—The insult offered to India in the appointment of an exclusively British Commission makes our blood boil and lacerates our heart. The arguments advanced by the Viceroy for the exclusion of Indians do not make him out to be an ingenuous and pious man as he was reported to be. The authorities have only the right of force in imposing such a commission on the country. Indians must boycott the Commission inasmuch as the right of self-determination has been denied to them. The spirit exhibited by prominent Liberal leaders in this connexion is highly welcome. Inscrutable are the ways of God. Those who were not induced to espouse non-cooperation even by the fearful Jallianwala Bagh tragedy have been converted into non-cooperators because of the failure of Government to include one or two Indians in the Commission. God has again given us an opportunity for unity and for the service of the country with renewed enthusiasm. An all-party Congress should submit its scheme of swaraj to the Commission declaring that nothing less than that scheme would satisfy Indians and that they would use every legitimate and peaceful means to get it accepted. The Anand remarks :—By excluding Indians from the Commission the British Government has thrown out a challenge to the whole of India, insulted Indian nationalism and demonstrated its disregard for Indian public opinion. It is surprising that Lord Irwin who should have fought to the finish the Indian cause is sprinking salt over the wound by singing to the tune of the British Government. There can be only one self-respecting answer to the challenge thrown out by the Conservative Government and that is "boycott of the Commission." The Sainik says :—We belong to that school of political thought which would have nothing to do with the Commission even if all its members, including the chairman, were Indians, because we do not consider ourselves to be so degraded as to submit to a test of our capacity by a foreign agency. We are not prepared to leave the arbitration of our destinies in the hands of British Parliament. Swaraj is our birthright and the question of our fitness or unfitness does not arise at all. We are not prepared to submit to a test of our capability but if it is necessary to hold a test let there be a test of both British officials and Indians by an impartial commission composed of members of the Chinese nationalist party and of the Soviet Government. If the British Government cannot accept such a Commission then we too cannot agree to the client being the judge. The Pratap is doubtful regarding the success of the proposal for the boycott of the Commission and says :—We are inclined to think that this talk of boycott will disappear if a couple of Indians are included in the Commission. We are not prepared to concede that any public good will accrue from the inclusion of a few Indians. We hold India and not the British Parliament or the Statutory Commission to be the arbiter of the destinies of the Indian nation. The Abhyudaya writes :—By excluding Indians from the Commission the British Cabinet has grossly insulted us and if Indians have any sense of dignity and self-respect they should boycott the Commission just as the Milner Commission was boycotted by the Egyptians. If we have any manliness in us we should not submit to this national insult. If Congressmen have any wisdom left in them and if they understand politics they can bring all the political parties into their own fold and can re-infuse life into every province, district, city and town. The Shakti observes:—Indians should boycott this Commission even as the wily Conservative Government has excluded them from it. It is high time that Indians should carry on a vigorous agitation after the manner of the Irish and the Egyptians. The Hitaishi remarks :—If Indians have an iota of self-respect in them they will blacken the face of this Commission and show to the arrogant Imperialists that the blood of the brave Aryans still courses in their veins and that they will never submit to the insult hurled at them. The Medina says that the Viceroy's appeal in connexion with the Commission contains enough material not only to foment inter-communal but also inter-caste animosity. The first resolution of the coming Congress should be to enlist one lakh of volunteers and collect ten lakhs of rupees to make the boycott of this useless Commission a success. The Hamdam says that none but Anglo Indians and a few full-blooded ji huzoors can welcome the Commission or expect any good to India from it. Nothing better could be expected from the party in power in England at present or from the Government of India which has always been to the fore in taking advantage of communal and political dissensions to disregard public opinion. If shameless Indians take lesson even now and sink their differences this Commission will prove a blessing in disguise. It should be noted that simply commissions can never advance a nation and its progress depends solely on its determination and sacrifice.

A united front is now needed and it is absolutely necessary that the leaders should bring their heads together and decide upon a common course. We welcome Mr. Jinnah's proposed conference and if it materializes and the Moderates and Liberals remain faithful in this war till the end and do not, according to their party traditions, retrace their steps a welcome change in the present decision can be confidently expected. In a subsequent issue the paper publishes a letter from Sheikh Qudrat Ullah, a worker among the depressed classes, in which the writer says that it is absurd to talk of the boycott of the Commission. Those advocating a boycott are ignorant of the real public feeling. At least 20 crores of the Indian population would accord an enthusiastic welcome to the Commission, and arrangements are also being made for presenting several addresses. In view of the present situation in the country it was quite just not to include Indians in the Commission. Seven crores of the depressed classes and at least five crores of Muslims are sure to join in welcoming the Commission. The Haqiqat writes:—A purely Parliamentary Commission and that also with a Conservative majority can in no way satisfy Indians with its inquiry as it can hardly appreciate Indian national sentiments and aspirations regarding freedom. The association of committees of Indian members of the various legislatures will in no way alter the real nature of the Commission and Indians cannot be expected to accord it even a half-hearted welcome. No self-respecting party in India can tolerate this insult. In a subsequent issue, however, the paper advises Muslims to await developments before committing themselves to any opinion regarding the Commission and says:—It will be time enough for them to act when the Hindus have decided upon their course of action. In view of the Viceroy's appeal for cooperation Muslims should not take any hasty steps until opinion has crystallised among all parties. May be the Hindu sabhaites and cooperators may hold aloof from Mr. Jinnah's conference and pursue a separate course though the supreme need of the moment is a solid front. Anyway a considerable group among Muslims is in view of happenings during the last few years disinclined to welcome a further instalment of reforms. The display of sangathanist spirit by the Hindus has made this party very diffident and there is very little feeling among Muslims against the Commission. The Haq remarks that although the personnel of the Commission may be regarded as disappointing, yet in view of the existing state of the country this could not be helped. The British Parliament had no other alternative. Even if some Indians had been included the prospects of the success of the Commission in the present state of communalism, would not have been improved and the differences must have remained the same. Not the British Parliament but the present condition of the country is responsible for its constitution and therefore instead of blaming Parliament we must blame ourselves. There is still time for us to improve the situation and to take all possible advantage of the Commission lest its recommendations should be all the more disappointing for us. The Punch Raj heartily welcomes the Commission and says that the so-called leaders advocate its boycott only in order to get a fresh opportunity, after the failure of non-cooperation, to mislead the country and to stir up an agitation. Who can say that an Indian would have served on the Commission with an unbiassed mind and satisfied all sections in his country? It would be disastrous to Indians to fall into the snares of a few Labour M.P's and to boycott the Commission. The Sada-i-Muslim says that the attitude of the Hindus towards Muslims after the failure of non-cooperation needs no comment. The Hindu leaders did not confine their anti-Muslim activities to economic and political matters alone but some of them went even so far as to proceed to England to prejudice Parliament and high officials against Muslims. The chief object of their propaganda in England was to get Pandit Malaviya and Messrs. Lajpat Rai and Moti Lal included in the Commission. It was quite possible that along with these Hindu leaders a Muslim also may have been appointed on the Commission but it is equally clear that with such a personnel the Muslim member would have been absolutely helpless and the Hindus would have done what they liked. The British Government has shown great foresight in excluding Indians from the Commission and as a matter of fact it is in the best interests of Muslims. All the Muslim leaders should hold a joint conference and should come to a definite decision at once. It would be extremely injurious to Muslims to boycott the Commission.

The Aryan Congress.

Hindu papers generally seek to justify the resolutions passed by the Aryan Congress. A number of Muslim papers regard the resolutions as a declaration of war on their community. The Vartman warmly commends the action of the Aryan Congress in passing the resolution regarding the adoption of civil disobedience and makes an impassioned appeal to young men to enlist as volunteers. It says :—The need for such a resolution is imperative at a time when no value is attached to the rights of Hindus and when any one can twist their necks. The Aryan Congress has sounded the bugle of war. Those who feel for the community, those who are mad for dying for their religion, those who are pained at the fall of the entire Hindu community should come forward. The Swadesh writes :—The resolutions passed by the Aryan Congress give evidence of the spiritedness of the Arya Samaj. The satyagrah resolution which betokens its irrepressible enthusiasm and unflinching determination is specially commendable. It will be a proud day for the country when, weighing our strength fully and standing on our own legs, we shall be able to assert our rights. The Hitaishi approves of the satyagrah resolution and says that it is not only the duty of the Arya Samaj but also of the entire Hindu community to act on this resolution and make it a success. The Haqiqat says that while the resentment of Aryas at the murder of their co-religionists is quite natural the provocative resolutions passed at the Aryan Congress to stop it will only accentuate the prevailing tension and might lead to retaliatory murder of Muslim leaders by fanatical Hindus. The bigoted Arya leaders have spat such fire in the Congress that its flames already threaten to destroy the peace of Delhi. The Aryan hotspurs might resort only to peaceful passive resistance or like the Bengalis might throw bombs at the officials but so far as the Hindu-Muslim quarrel is concerned we must say plainly that they cannot intimidate Muslims by such warlike demonstrations just in the same way as no sensible Muslim can hope to subdue the Hindu community by killing Arya leaders. The Medina writes :—This Congress was an ebullition of the Arya Samajist cauldron which had been simmering for such a long time and was a reflection of the mentality which by its mischievousness has turned into hell the heavenly country of India. The sentiments of hostility to Islam and Muslims have burst out, the veils of hypocrisy and animosity have been lifted and the secret intentions of the Hindu community have been revealed. The resolution on the enlistment of volunteers was like a declaration of war on the Muslims and we want to know what the line of action of the Muslim leaders will now be? Al Khalil says that the Aryan Congress left no stone unturned to stir up hatred against the Muslims and Government. Messrs. Malaviya, Moonje and Lajpat Rai will surely bring about a civil war in India one day. They are friends neither of the country nor of Government. They are obsessed only by solicitude for their leadership and for Hindu raj. The Congress wants swaraj and the Maha Sabha Hindu raj. The Rahnuma says that the proposals for the arrest of Muslim ulema and the proscription of the tenth chapter of the Quran were most provocative. So long as this mentality persists among sangathanists riots would not cease. The Sarfaraz holds that the resolutions passed by the Congress will further vitiate the communal atmosphere in India. Pointed references to the Malabar and Multan incidents, the demand for the arrest of Muslim ulema and the proscription of the Quran and threats to take the law into their own hands can only lead to strife and discord.

The Garhmukteshwar riot.

Muslim papers bitterly complain of "atrocities and barbarities" perpetrated by Hindus at Garhmukteshwar. The Anand attributes the riot to the indignation roused among the Hindus by the action of the Muslims in making indecent gestures to Hindu women and insulting them by indulging in naked dance and says that foreigners should be banned from joining such Hindu bathing fairs in which women predominate and the practice of staring at women and making indecent gestures towards them should be stopped forthwith. It regrets that the laxity of the officials encourages the goondas to indulge in such practices and expresses the hope that the Garhmukteshwar incident will make the Government officials more alert in the discharge of their duties. Al Khalil, which has written five strong articles on the subject, says :—What a horrible demonstration of tyranny and barbarity it was that even the presence of the Governor and the district officers produced no effect on it. Should we now take it that all relations between the Government and the governed have ceased to exist, and that the British Government has been humiliated before the might of sangathan? Would the authorities still hesitate to regard this sort of high-handedness and criminal audacity as an insult to Government? Would the authorities even in the light of these incidents still fail to realize the danger with which they are faced? The sangathanist teachings and the exhortations of the sangathanist leaders have so emboldened the Hindus that now they do not care a straw for the Government. We hold that the occurrence of such an incident in the presence of the Governor is an open insult to Government. We now only wait to see what measures are being adopted after the Governor has himself witnessed an exhibition of the Hindu mentality. Would he still lend his ears to the whispers of Hindu officials? Would he still believe in the false stories of the high-handedness of Muslims and the helplessness of the Hindus? We warn the Government that it is now high time for it to open its eyes lest this fire should some day reduce the Government House itself to ashes along with the Muslims. The paper also gives a lengthy list of the losses which the local shop-keepers have suffered and request Government to collect such information about outsiders by means of a notification. The same paper publishes a telegram from the Joint Secretary, Muslim League, Moradabad, saying that the Muslim victims of the Garhmukteshwar fair who have reached Moradabad give a very sad account of the barbarities to which they were subjected by the sangathanists. They say that there was free and unrestricted looting. The Arya Samajists and Seva Samiti volunteers encouraged the Hindus to attack Muslim shopkeepers. They have given the names of several Hindu wrestlers who took active part in the disturbance and also complain against certain police officials who refused to take down the reports made by the victims. The Hamdam repeats the Muslim version of the origin and course of the riot and says:—Lakhs of Hindus showed their valour and goondaism because they found the Muslim traders in a minority. The fact that Hindi handbills were distributed to incite the concourse shows that the trouble was fomented by Hindu stalwarts from outside who had come prepared to take advantage of the small numbers of the Muslim shop-keepers. It has now really become a commonplace of sangathanist propaganda to promote ill-will and hatred by investing tales of insults to Hindu women. Government should take effective measures and compensate the Muslim traders for their losses. Deploring the repeated Hindu-Muslim conflicts the Haqiqat writes:—A pandit had once predicted that soon there would be another Mahabharat (great war) in India and Muslims would have to leave the country. If all this is really the effect of this prophecy Muslims should be prepared to abandon India and to hand over Aryavart to their compatriots. The Najat, Rahnuma and Haq also bitterly complain of Hindu atrocities.

The Delhi riot.

Hindu papers call attention to the "Muslim mentality as displayed by wide sympathy with Abdul Rashid" culminating in the riot at Delhi and strongly criticize the local authorities for not taking adequate measures to safeguard the lives and property of innocent citizens and promptly to deal with any emergency that might arise. The Leader writes:—That such widespread sympathy should have been shown for one who had paid the extreme penalty of the law for a dastardly and cold-blooded murder of an old and highly respected leader who was lying on his sick-bed was bad enough. But that it should have taken the form of an anti-Hindu outbreak must give rise to feelings and suggest questions which cannot conduce to communal good-will. The Aj remarks that the riot is an ordinary sample of the deplorable straits to which even the Government can be reduced by religious fanaticism getting out of control and an illustration of the dictum that the mob which is accustomed to take the law into its hands does not rest content with perpetrating atrocities on the followers of other creeds but will surely one day defy constituted authority as well. If this should not open the eyes of the authorities and if they should not resolutely determine to put down such lawless people it cannot but have undesirable consequences not only for non-Muslims but also for the Government. This is but the logical conclusion of the policy of placing restrictions on the observance of the religious and social functions of the peaceful for fear of violence on the part of the lawless. The Vartman says:—By trying their utmost to save Abdul Rashid a very large section of the Muslims of India has evinced its bigotry and meanness. The Government should understand the mentality of Muslims in the light of the latest Delhi incident and change its attitude for its present policy is slowly kindling among the Hindus a fire of hatred against it. No one can say when this fire may burst into flames. It should, therefore, take timely measures to extinguish the fire.

Political propaganda.

The Hindu Mitra writes:—The constant reiteration of the view that swaraj cannot be attained without Hindu-Muslim unity tends only to perpetuate our slave mentality. The very idea that 22 crores of Hindus should remain drowned in subjection because of the unwillingness of a few crores of Muslims to co-operate with them is simply terrible. Every country had to fight against the traitors among its own people before it could become free. Ireland would never have won her freedom had she not fought against Ulster. The Swadesh publishes an article by a writer who signs himself as Rakt-ranjit (blood-stained). It describes how the tutelary deity of the Chittor House, Goddess Mahakali, appeared in a vision before Rana Lakhan Singh when he was hard pressed by the invading forces of Sultan Ala-ud-din and told him that she was hungry and that her appetite for blood could be satiated only by the sacrifice of himself and ten of his eleven sons. Proceeding the writer says:—A similar situation has arisen to-day in a new form. The mother standing before the youths of India declares: "I am hungry" O Indian youths, the mother in her terrible form demands offerings in the shape of the self-immolation of ardent, generous, valiant and self-reliant heroes. She demands the oblation of the blood of her devoted votaries. She demands the heads of learned, powerful and selfless workers. She demands the skeletons of youthful ascetics freed from the bonds of love and hatred, fear and worldly attachments. Are the readers sincerely prepared to offer such a sacrifice?

Muslim affairs.

The Haqiqat says that the Finance Member's reply to Nawabzada Liaqat Ali Khan in the local Legislative Council about his ignorance of the existence of any unrest among Lucknow Muslims about the milad at Aminabad Park shows that Government is either totally indifferent towards the sentiments of its subjects or becomes attentive only when agitation reaches troublesome limits. Lucknow Muslims are grossly dissatisfied with the action of the sangathanist Hindu majority in the board which has forbidden milad which has been peacefully held for the last so many years. The Hamdam says that Muslims are prepared to explore every avenue of constitutional agitation until the Aminabad Park milad wrong is righted. Hindus have got a mandir and a shivala in the park though in the settlement map and khasra of 1908 when this land was acquired there is no mention of a temple. It is said that the foundation of a temple was laid at night at the place where the clock tower now stands and under a compromise the site was transferred to its present venue. It thus appears that the Hindus have no right to the land over which the temple is built. On the other hand the Muslims have been offering their prayers on the ground long before the park was laid out. Milad was regularly permitted in the park, the need for applying for permission arising only because a shamiana had to be pitched. Who can say now that the Muslims are unjustified in their expression of dissatisfaction and that they are not being treated most intolerantly?

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Aligarh Mail strongly protests against the "forcible shuddhi" of Gaddis in the Tamkohi State, Gorakhpur district, and regards it as a wicked machination to create bad blood between the two great communities of the land. It adds:—When Muslims are being bullied by shuddhists the toblighists must muster strong and flood Tamkohi with their preachings on Islam so that the conversion of Gaddis to Hinduism may prove a hard job for the mischievous shuddhists.

Reforms.

HINDU papers continue to protest vehemently against the exclusion of Indians from the Statutory Commission and generally advocate a complete boycott. Muslim Press opinion is now crystallizing predominantly in favour of the Commission, and some of the papers which in the beginning supported boycott are now emphasizing the need for caution. They recall the "anti-Muslim attitude of Hindu politicians, especially sangathanists," and many of them welcome the exclusion of Indians. They argue that had Indians been included most of them would have been Hindus who would have done their best to prejudice the European members against Muslims, especially with regard to their demand for the retention of separate electorates. The Leader, which is advocating the boycott of the Commission in almost every issue, writes:—The opportunity offered by the supreme unwisdom of Mr. Baldwin's Government ought not to be missed. Let us bury our dissensions and try to banish the spirit of strife based on distrust and strive in a spirit of broad-minded and tolerant nationalism to put our house in order and to formulate a united national demand. The boycott of the Commission is a negative act. It should be followed by a constructive effort. Supporting the proposal for the boycott of the Commission the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—The tactics employed by British imperial propagandists to create a division in our ranks with a view to popularize the Simon Commission and ensure some support for it are so subtle that we must guard against all possibility of a split. Faint-hearted folk and waverers, whose number we are glad is negligible, should not at this psychological moment commit the mistake of falling a victim to the unscrupulous attempts of the Conservative reactionaries and their allies. The country has finally decided to boycott the Commission, and it is to be hoped no Indian will go back upon that decision. The Aligarh Mail writes:—We are again face to face with the grave danger of our sentiments being played upon by astute Hindu diplomats, who have always, though cleverly enough not avowedly, placed the interests of their community before those of the country and other communities. Appeals for boycotting the Commission will be made to us in the name of the Motherland though for the benefit of the appellants. We maintain that communal representation through communal electorates is the jugular vein of the body-politic of Muslims. Had Indians been included in the Commission the Hindus would have carried their machinations to cut that vein to the very sanctum of the Commission. Those machinations are now impossible. The Commission is an impartial tribunal to judge and decide the case. We regard the Commission to be an Allah-send to Muslims. If they fight out their case ably they are sure to win it. Our considered advice to them, therefore, is:—Don't boycott the Commission.

The Pratap remarks:—The Commission has proved a blessing, inasmuch as it has brought on one common platform Moderates like Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir Abdur Rahim, Mr. Chintamani, and Dr. Annie Besant on the one hand, and staunch non-cooperators like Mahatma Gandhi, Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar, Babu Bhagwan Das, and Dr. Ansari on the other. There is a consensus of opinion in favour of the boycott of the Commission, and, if the boycott movement is inaugurated, the Statutory Commission is doomed to meet the same miserable fate as had befallen the Milner Commission in Egypt and the Prince of Wales' visit during non-cooperation days. If the opposition gains strength there is little doubt that the British Government, as is its wont, will retrace its steps and make certain concessions to placate Indian opinion. The Aj endorses Pandit Motilal Nehru's views regarding the Royal Commission and says that the best interests of the country will be served if the Commission does not include any Indian members and Indians themselves determine the form of the future constitution of their country independently. They have to perform a two-fold duty: the one being to formulate their scheme of national constitution and strive whole-heartedly to attain it, and the other to paralyze the existing irresponsible Government by means of non-violent but steadfast non-cooperation. The Anand says that it is the duty of the Muslims to be guided by the wholesome advice of their leaders like Sir Ali Imam, Sir Abdur Rahim, Maulana Muhammad Ali, and Mr. Jinnah and to boycott the Statutory Commission so that the world may know that the Indian people are united in their protest against the affront offered to them. The British Government has stepped forward to crush Indian nationalism and is resorting to a new manœuvre to perpetuate India's slavery. Those who are talking of co-operating with the Commission are taking a suicidal step and are murdering the interests of the country. The Swadesh writes:—The appointment of the Royal Commission has to-day opened the eyes of even those who expected a white heart within the white form of the white bureacracy. The Viceroy has tried hard to justify the non-inclusion of Indians therein, but these hypocritical sentiments can no longer deceive Indians and only offer a most grievous insult to their self-respect. The best reply to this insult will be for Indians to boycott the Commission and publish their own scheme of a national constitution. In case it is rejected an agitation should be set on foot throughout the country. This opportunity of putting out communalism by the spirit of national awakening should by no means be allowed to slip by. The Shakti recalls the attitude of Egyptians towards the Milner Commission and says:—We should adopt measures accelerating the severance of relations between India and Britain. The good of India consists in such a course of action. If the white diplomats of Britain want to live in India they should live as servants, but if they are fond of ruling us they should go back to their homes bag and baggage. Let us follow the policy of "Tit for tat." The Hindu Mitra denounces the personnel of the Commission and says that Mahatma Gandhi alone can return an effective answer to the challenge thrown out by the British Government. It is high time that the non-cooperation movement was revived and Mahatma Gandhi urged to take up the leadership. The Samaya remarks:—The unanimity among Indian leaders over the question of the boycott of the Commission facilitates the inauguration of a mass movement aimed not only at an effective boycott of the Commission, but also at compelling the Government to concede the national demands. The Abhyudaya warns the Hindus against the advice of Raja Narendra Nath that they should co-operate with the Statutory Commission in provinces where they are in a minority, and says that the interests of the country demand that the Commission should be boycotted notwithstanding Muslim co-operation with it. It adds: We would emphatically urge a boycott of the Commission even if Muslims by their co-operation with it were to gain advantages over the Hindus because we would bid good-bye even to a world-wide Empire if it were to be had by submitting to national insults and indignities. We can tolerate the existing state of affairs for some time more, but we cannot recognize others as the arbiters of our destinies. The Vartman regards the opponents of the proposal for the boycott of the Commission as traitors to their country and warns them of the fate that has befallen such men in all ages and countries. The Desh Bhagat regards the Commission as merely a device to fulfil statutory obligations and to hoodwink the world and says:—Lord Irwin's reference to communal tension shows that these internal troubles were fomented as a political set-off to smooth the path of the Commission. Any co-operation on the part of Indians with such a camouflaged Commission will only enable the ruling class to plant on an unsuspecting world the fiction that its recommendations were in consonance with Indian opinion. Indians should get to work by effecting a complete boycott of the Commission and by pushing forward the constructive programme. It is only when the constructive programme is completed that Englishmen will realize the strength of India, and they will then of their own accord extend the hand of peace just as they had done in China.

The Hamdam hopes that the Madras Congress will ratify the Calcutta decisions and restore harmony between the two communities and thus enable them to present a united front against the Commission. If the Madras Congress fails in this the Muslim minority will have to reconsider its position in regard to the question of boycott. The position of Muslims is very delicate. They are in a minority and therefore they should act with care and caution. They should await the decision of their political bodies and should abide by it. In a subsequent article the paper says that in thrusting an unpopular Commission on Indians Government has only committed another blunder of the magnitude of the Jallianwala Bagh massacre for which it shall have to face difficulties similar to those of the days of non-cooperation. As a result of shuddhi and sangathan movements nationalism has almost died in India. Now the Commission will awaken Indians, and a new era of national life will be inaugurated. Mr. Masudul Hasan, Bar-at-law, ex-member of the local Legislative Council, contributes a lengthy article to the paper in which he says that the boycott of the Commission will not be a wise step in any respect. There will never be a complete boycott, and a partial boycott will only lower their position in the eyes of the British nation. The Haqiqat publishes an article by Qazi Maqbul Husain in which he sees no good in the inclusion of representatives of divergent Indian races, creeds, and parties in the Commission and regrets that some self-styled Muslim leaders have tried to play a second fiddle to the Hindu intelligentsia. The Muslim Congressmen are the despair of their community as they have always wrecked its interests by their ignorance and selfishness. Government is to blame for lending its ears to their counsels. We on our part have faith in the members of the Commission and would rather entrust our cause into their hands than to our leaders. Referring to the proposed boycott of the Commission the Medina writes :—After suppressing the non-cooperation movement, aggravating the Hindu-Muslim tension and crushing the Swarajists, the Liberals and the Moderates have no right to object to the personnel and scope of the Commission. All this has been brought about by them. In our opinion if they let the matter stand, as it is, bring about some compromise between Hindus and Muslims and start non-cooperation, and the whole of India combines in inaugurating a revolutionary movement, this Commission will be withdrawn to-morrow, and Mr. Baldwin will come down to India personally and take part in a round-table conference. The talk of boycott is childish. Al Khalil says :—It is desirable that Muslim leaders and organizations should avoid expressing any opinion about the Commission in their individual capacity. We have had enough experience of the attitude of the sanagathanist leaders, and, in view of their attitude, Hindu-Muslim unity is an impossibility now. Sinking their personal differences the Muslim leaders should meet together to come to a united and considered decision about the Commission. The Najat writes :—Whatever is being said and done about the Commission at present is only tentative. For the present God has inflicted His curse on India in the shape of Messrs. Malaviya, Moonje and Lajpat Rai, and so we should wait till this curse of God is revoked, and then, by reviving our old efforts, we would render Government helpless and then, of course, it will not be necessary for us to demand anything of Government. The Aziz-i-Hind writes :—The British Government is to be congratulated on the exclusion of Indians from the Commission. We are having an experience of the first instalment of the Reforms and we see how the Hindu majority is trampling upon the rights of the Muslims. In view of the present condition of the country the question of a further instalment is really premature. The masses which have suffered under the Reforms earnestly wish that no further instalment may be given. In a subsequent article the paper earnestly requests Indians to take advantage of the opportunity and to represent the true state of affairs before the Commission. It advises Muslims to keep themselves aloof from the foolish movement for the boycott of the Commission because it would be suicidal to them. The paper expects that if the Government remains firm those very leaders who are preaching a boycott will one day bow their heads before the Commission. Under the head-line "The Tactics of Our Countrymen" the Mashriq publishes a lengthy article by Syed Fazl-ur Rahman Ahmadi, who says that Muslims should give up the idea of swaroj as it savours of heresy. Swaraj is not likely to lead to the progress of Indian Muslims. Swaraj may mean anything to other communities of India, but it means nothing but an insult and disgrace to Muslims. Muslims should not alienate themselves from the English because they are the people of the Book, are in power, and are ready to grant to Muslims their political rights. The idea of swaraj should be abandoned for good as it would sound the death-knell of Muslim nationality in India.

The Aryan Congress.

Muslim feeling against the resolutions of the Aryan Congress remains unabated. The Medina writes :—The session of the Aryan Congress was, on the whole, strongly directed against that civilization of Turkey and Arabia which for one thousand years continually enriched the semi-barbarous, semi-nude, and illiterate people of India with culture and made them men, but benefiting by the vicissitudes of fortune this ungrateful and thankless nation, although it makes a show of Western culture, lays the foundation of hostility against the best civilization of the East and starts a cultural war against Indian Muslims. There was no speaker who did not mention the name of Muslims ten times and prove that the Arya Samajists and their victims, the Malaviyites, had no enemy to face except the Muslims. Now we want to ask Indian Muslims how long are they going to thirst for peace and unity, how long will they loll in lethargy, how long will they remain divided, and when will their time for action come? Is not this flood of paganism and heresy which is sweeping the soil of unfortunate India, this storm of opposition and this tempest of enmity and hate which is raging over the country sufficient to arouse our forces of resistance? Are we going to witness it as passive spectators and put up with these tribulations like dying men? Brethren, how should we meet this declaration of war, how should we combat this growing animosity of the jati (lit. community; here refers to Hindus, especially Arya Samajists)? They do not want peace or unity. They do not care for co-operation. They are indifferent to India's freedom, they hate swaraj, and are inimical to the peace of the country. But for a few Congressmen and patriots who is there in the jati whose arrows of hate and enmity are not directed against the Muslims? The only means to combat this is for the Muslims to sink their differences and convene a conference for chalking out a common programme. The Najat says that the Aryan Congress concentrated itself on devising means to injure Muslims. It would have been better if the Congress had made a general declaration of war against Muslims and thus roused them from their lethargy. Muslims should instead of adopting counter-measures against the Aryas confine themselves to constructive work. When they become self-contained they can meet any power. Writing in a similar strain Al Khalil says:—If Government and the leaders of the country are not awakened even now the situation will take a serious turn and every inch of the land will be enveloped by the flames of civil war. The Hind-i-Jadid says that the history of India cannot furnish another parallel to the poisonous speeches delivered and provocative resolutions passed against Muslims at the Arya Congress. The Krishna welcomes the formation of a council of war by the Aryas in connexion with the order of the District Magistrate of Delhi cancelling their procession and says that the operations of this war council should extend to other cities where the authorities disregard the Queen's Proclamation about religious freedom. This war council should not confine itself to the issue of directions about civil disobedience but should also organize an army of Aryas under its ægis in which every Arya between the ages of 18 and 25 should be compelled to enlist and learn military drill. There should be an Akhara attached to every Arya Samaj, and every effort should be made to improve the physical condition and to develop the strength of Aryas. Then, and then alone, can the Aryan Congress be said to be successful.

The Garhmukteshwar riot.

Muslim papers continue to call attention in impassioned language to the atrocities and babarities "perpetrated" by Hindus at Garhmukteshwar. The Pratap condemns the action of the Hindus of Garmukteshwar in perpetrating excesses upon the Muslims and says that these excesses have been more than outweighed by those committed by the Muslims on the Hindus at Delhi. At both the places the authorities made no satisfactory arrangements. It is significant that simultaneously with the plundering of shops in one quarter of the Garmukteshwar fair His Excellency Sir William Marris was proceeding on an elephant in the other quarter. What a nice management on which His Excellency as well as the police deserve to be congratulated! The Medina says that a perusal of the account of the cowardice and tyranny evinced by the Hindus at Garhmukteshwar shows that this community has at once started acting on the advice given to it by the Aryan Congress. The attack of a mob of five or six lakhs on one thousand or twelve hundred helpless Muslims is the meanest act in human history and a matter of shame for the Hindu community. By creating this disturbance the cunning Hindu community has secured a great economic advantage, inasmuch as it has purged the mêla of Muslim shop-keepers. The Government and its police have also given evidence of their shameless want of foresight in the matter. On the one hand, the advent of the Commission has been announced; while on the other, the Government has become bankrupt in administrative efficiency. The Najat says that the accounts of the Garhmukteshwar disturbance appearing in the Press clearly indicate that sangathanists are now determined to extirpate Muslims from India by force and in the pride of their power they despise even the Government. It is now an open secret that for the present there is no protection for the life and property of Muslims in India. If the Government is unmindful of its authority and prestige at least the Muslims would never bear to lose their honour and self-respect. It is simply impossible for Muslims to suffer the sangathanists' atrocities and to remain quiet. The last resort of subjects in every country are courts; but here in India they are the place where the glory of sangathan is seen most. There was an organized Hindu conspiracy behind the loot and rapine which was a challenge to Government also. It is the herald of anarchy and lawlessness in the country. Wisdom demands that the trouble should be nipped in the bud. The Haq writes :—The blood-curdling reports of Muslim losses expose the bandit mentality of the attackers. The negligence of the police and its failure to gain control over the trouble are still more surprising. We appeal to the United Provinces Government to appoint an impartial official commission to inquire into this deplorable disturbance and then to compensate the Muslims for their losses and to punish the responsible mischief-making class adequately.

The Delhi riot.

Referring to the disturbance at Delhi that followed the execution of Abdul Rashid the Abhyudaya remarks:—That the dead body of Abdul Rashid was taken in procession round the city, despite the definite orders of the authorities to the contrary, shows what degradation has overtaken the Government officials. The congretation of 50,000 Muslims behind the jail gates proves that at least these Muslims sympathized with Abul Rashid, who in their opinion did not commit any sin. We urge the Hindu Sabha of Delhi and the Aryan League to persuade those who were injured in the Delhi disturbance and their relatives to sue the Secretary of State for India and the authorities concerned for damages and thereby expose the helplessness and the laxity of administration. The Anand remarks:—Do not the excesses perpetrated by the Muslims upon the Hindus of Delhi on the occasion of the execution of Abdul Rashid justify the conviction of Hindus that there was a conspiracy behind the murder of Swami Shraddhanand, of which Abdul Rashid was but one member? The fact that the Delhi authorities did not adopt adequate measures to avert the disturbance and acted rather imprudently in removing Abdul Rashid's dead body from the jail when the crowd which had assembled outside the jail gate was determined to take it out in procession makes it clear that the authorities deliberately allowed the Hindus to be beaten and did not protect their lives and property. The demand of the Hindus that the losses suffered by them may be repaired by imposing a tax on the Muslims is very reasonable, and it is the duty of the Delhi authorities to take necessary action. The Arya Mitra condemns the action of the Delhi Muslims in taking out Abdul Rashid's dead body in procession and remarks:—Does not the Muslim mentality which delights in honouring assassins inculcate feelings of cruelty into Islam? Will not the honour done to Abdul Rashid encourage others to commit similar crimes in the name of religion? The Desh Bhagat says that the authorities knowingly furnish opportunities for rioting and use their police and military after the disturbance has taken place in order to proclaim their neutrality. If the authorities had not hanged Abdul Rashid at Delhi or had not allowed the crowd to proceed from the city towards the jail and had promulgated section 144 from the very beginning and started arrests the riot would never have taken place. But the authorities at Delhi have fallen into the habit of provoking riots and then looking at the fun. They attach no value to Hindu or Muslim lives or property. It would, therefore, be not at all surprising if such incidents occurred every day not only at Delhi, but all over India.

Muslim affairs.

The Rohilkhand Gazette writes:—Advocates of Hindu raj and supporters of sangathan are secretly designing not only to achieve mutual unity, but also to purge all departments of Muslims. In the first place, so far as possible Muslims should be given no posts, and even if they are given any posts they should be temporary. In departments in which Muslims are subordinate to Hindu officers they are harassed and the time is not far off when self-respecting Muslims will prefer to tender their resignations and by this artifice vacancies will be created for Hindus. It is the duty of high European officials to see that Muslims are not denied their rights in Government departments and to listen patiently to their just grievances.

The Hamdam deplores the communal spirit of the Hindu majority in the Lucknow Municipal Board, and urges Government to interfere before the matter takes a more serious turn. The Hindus already possess two temples in the Aminabad Park, but the Muslims are not allowed to hold their milad in it. The resolution banning religious gatherings in the Park was passed at a meeting of the board after the Muslim members had walked out as a protest. Really the board has, by its aggressive bigotry, forfeited its right to administer the civic affairs of peoples of various creeds.

Reforms.

EXCEPT the Hamdam, Medina, Najat, and a few other papers the entire Muslim press is now definitely opposed to the boycott of the Statutory Commission, and even these journals do not propose to join the boycott campaign unless a reasonable compromise regarding Muslim rights is effected. The majority of Urdu papers edited by Hindus is also supporting the Commission. Commenting on the Lords debate on the composition of the Commission the Leader writes:—We reject the advice of all the four noble lords—of the "Liberal" Marquis, the Tory Earl, the two-party Viscount, and the Labour Baron. Their advocacy of the Commission —the unsatisfactory and insulting Commission—has left us unmoved. We are unconvinced, unconverted, unrepentant. Our duty is to have nothing to do with this Commission and to agitate strongly for its effective boycott. In a subsequent issue the paper writes:—Almost irreparable will be the actual injury caused by this wholesale national exclusion—this imperial boycott of the King's Indian subjects for whose benefit (indeed, in compliance with whose wishes!) the Commission is alleged to have been constituted. To this is added the intolerable insult of the ill-conceived lay sermons of men who have done India harm but pose as her friends, to the best of men of India to behave like good boys. Our reply is that we think we understand ourselves and our country's needs, we have no use for the gratuitous advice of these noblemen for whose Indian careers we can feel no admiration and in whose pathetic protestations of abounding good-will we cannot possibly place even fractional confidence. Commenting on Lord Birkenhead's speech the Indian Daily Telegraph writes:—It was an interminable, tortuous and pompous utterance but unconvincing. One is lost in the mazes of it. It was like a labyrinth. It was unimaginative and unsympathetic verbiage. It must fall flat on Nationalist India. The very idea of a Commission coming to report if India is fit for self-government is repulsive. Nationalist India demands self-government as her birth-right. She is of opinion that swaraj is essential to the future progress and to her very existence. The cumbrous, pompous, and hollow method Lord Birkenhead suggests for associating Indians with the Commission shows that he is only trifling with the matter. But this clever device cannot deceive the Indian people and their representatives. The very nature of the proposals and the procedure is likely to create suspicion. It appears to be a hoax. It does not appeal to the Indian people and their representatives. India stands for self-determination. India demands a round table conference.

The Aj says that the debate in Parliament on the Royal Commission reveals the fact that, so far as India is concerned, the Conservatives and Labour are at one in keeping her down. This also shows that the British are a living nation. Is it not possible that Indians, too, should show similar unity and forget their party differences as they have to face an autocratic foreign Government? It is desirable to counter the contemptible move involving insult to India by the exclusion of Indians from the Commission, but we do not consider it proper to make this the raison d'être of our boycott of the Commission. Our reason for such a course of action is more comprehensive, and in one word consists in the denial of the right of self-determination to us. The opinion of the Commission consisting of exclusively foreign members will not be worth even the paper and ink used in recording it. We are not criminals, and so we refuse to go before the "jury" of Simon Seven. The Anand exhorts Indian leaders to follow the example of the Australians in framing a constitution for their country and agitating for its acceptance. In another issue the paper says:—We cannot shut our eyes to the dreary prospect of a section of the Hindus co-operating with the Statutory Commission if the Muslims decide upon giving evidence before it. The wonder is that the Punjab Muslims, who form a majority in their province and have therefore nothing to fear from the Hindus, should have, of all others, set the ball rolling. The contagion is likely to spread to other provinces also. It is the duty of the Hindu and Muslim leaders to go round the country and dissuade their respective communities from cooperating with the Commission, explaining to them the disaster that would otherwise follow. The Pratap apprehends that the agitation for the boycott of the Commission may prove ephemeral as the majority of the organizers of the boycott movement are only concerned with the inclusion of Indians on the Commission and may dissociate themselves from the movement if a couple of Indians are included on the Commission. It condemns such a mentality and says that Indians should not recognize the right of Parliament to become the arbiter of their distinies. Let the leaders of different shades of political opinion who have at present joined a common platform draw up a constitution for India and declare that they will not rest on their oars, nor will they allow the rulers to have an easy time unless that constitution which represents the irreducible minimum is granted to India. One Vinay Krishna Parashar, writing to the paper, says:—The slogan of boycott which has been raised is incompatible with the spirit of true self-respect, and the success of the boycott movement is also problematic. A declaration of complete independence outside the British Empire as our goal can be the only effective answer to the obduracy and annoyance of the British Government. The Hindu Mitra regrets that Muslim organizations are generally opposed to the boycott of the Commission, and remarks:—Their attitude gives us an insight into the Muslim mentality. The mentality which weighed with Mir Jafar in inviting the British to this country persists even after a lapse of two centuries. During the Bengal partition agitation this mentality manifested itself in a most terrible and mischievous form. Signs are not wanting to show that this time the Hindus will have to carry on the boycott of the Commission single-handed. Hindu-Muslim unity in the present circumstances is an utter impossibility, and Hindus should stand on their own legs as long as the Muslim mentality does not undergo a complete change. The Abhyudaya welcomes the proposal to observe a universal hartal on the day the Commission lands in India, and suggests that simultaneously with the Commission holding its sitting in a particular city a public meeting should be held to record distrust of the Commission. The Aftab attributes the boycott propaganda to disgruntled politicians and says that their eyes will be opened when the Commission gets into direct touch with the man in the street, the peasant, and the worker. It is impossible to find representative Indians owing to the prevailing political and communal factions, and Government is right in deciding to consult the parties concerned instead of those who choose to pose as their advocates. Raja Brij Narain Rai of Padrauna, Gorakhpur, writing in the Oudh Akhbar says:—The Commission contains the best brains, and we must expect a generous gesture from it. The Viceroy's sympathy is patent, and we have his assurance that fully representative committees from the various Legislatures will have opportunities of recording their views. Surely no Indian leaders could, with the numerous contending factions in existence in the country claim to be more representative than the elected members of the Legislatures. The Commission should be heartily welcomed and Indian grievances frankly laid before it.

The Haqiqat writes:—Owing to the communal tension prevailing in the country, the movement for the boycott of the Commission does not appear to be gaining in strength. We are not opposed to boycott; we also hold that India has been insulted, but at the same time we are certain that Indian nature lacks in that patience and perseverance which is essential to the success of a boycott.

What then is the use of launching an agitation for a boycott and then climbing down and agreeing to co-operate after some minor concessions have been made? Khan Bahadur Nawab Ahmad Husain Khan, O.B.E., Taluqdar of Paryawan (district Partabgarh), writing in the paper, condemns the agitation in favour of the boycott of the Statutory Commission. He supports the exclusion of Indians from the Commission, because he thinks that a mixed Commission would not enjoy the confidence of any community. In conclusion, the Nawab advises his co-religionists to work for the withdrawal of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms which during the last seven years have not in any way benefited the country but have produced never-ending quarrels between Hindus and Muslims and led to frequent riots. The Hamdam writes :—We are glad that even some members of that docile body of people, the ministers, are thinking of resigning their offices and joining the boycott. It is, however, extremely painful to note that they were divided on communal lines even when discussing this question at their conference. This makes it clear that political and communal differences should be immediately composed. It is then, and then alone, that a successful boycott can be organized and settled decisions can be upset. In a subsequent issue commenting on Mr. Malaviya's views on the Commission, the paper says:— Unless Pandit Malaviya, in consultation with other leaders, comes to a definite decision his tall talk can do no good. The situation demands that he and his colleagues should broaden their hearts and be more tolerant. They should realize that a joint scheme of constitution is possible only when the Muslim minority is satisfied and a compromise between the two great communities is effected. Otherwise Pandit Malaviya's suggestion for the boycott of British goods and non-payment of taxes is only a mockery of the activities of the patriots. The Medina writes :—Those who are opposed to the boycott of the Commission are self-seeking or deluded. First of all, it is necessary for us to understand the mentality of the party which is going to decide the fate of India. This party consists of satanical Conservatives who are in power in Britain and in whose list of capitalistic ambitions the first place is occupied by India, which by reason of her natural wealth and fertility has been the victim of the greed and ambition of various nations, and which even now is not only feeding, to her detriment, six crores of Britishers, but is also making a number of white nations rich. Can the object of this party ever be to free a country on which, it thinks, depends the existence and greatness of its own land? . . . Gold will shower from the ploughs and the horns of the dying oxen of the naked and starving peasants of India and will be spent and legislatures, gifts of reforms, and the rewards of the Statutory Commission will lull 30 crores of people into a sweet sleep. One Dr. Mazhar-ul Haq of Bombay, writing in the paper, takes Maulanas Mukhtar Ahmad and Anis Ahmad severely to task for advising the Muslims to benefit by the Royal Commission and quotes verses from the Quran to show that it is against the tenets of Islam to seek the help of anyone except God. He says that Islam openly teaches that Muslims should recognize no government except that of God. Freedom is the birth-right of every Muslim child. To-day this birth-right is being taken away from us by means of the Royal Commission, which is being sent against our will. God says in clear words: "O Muslims, do not make friends with the Jews and Christians. They are friends of one another. He who makes friends with them is surely one of them." The only way now left to sensible Muslims is that side by side with the boycott of the Commission they should also boycott these maulanas who, at the instance of their secular gods, are trying to lead us astray from the path laid down by the sacred Quran. The Sada-i-Muslim says that the treatment which the Muslims have received at the hands of the Hindu majority during the last eight years of Reform needs no comment. In all the elected bodies, whether legislative or local, Muslims could never carry a single resolution in the interest of their community. Leaving the Government grants not a single pie out of the boards' own income is spent on the education of Muslims. The apathy shown by the district boards towards the education of Muslims in rural areas clearly shows that it is now futile to expect anything from the Hindus. It is really for the good of the Muslims that no Indian has been included in the Commission. Any Hindu included in the Commission would have been only a standard-bearer of the Hindu Mahasabha and sangathan and would have done the greatest possible harm to Muslims. The Muslims can have no grievance against the Commission nor should they boycott it. They should formulate their demands and should lay them before the Commission. Al Barid writes:—The majority of Hindus will never boycott the Commission, and a few of their leaders who are advocating boycott simply want to befool and ensnare Muslims. The Muslims should co-operate with the Commission and should come to a united decision to this effect at once. The Rahnuma observes:—In these days of communalism no Indian on the Commission could ever satisfy both the communities. The capacity which Indians have exhibited in the management of local bodies is very disappointing and disgraceful. The manner in which the majority has been crippling the minority is a good index of its future attitude. The Mahasabha and the Aryan Congress are still busy in fanning the fire of communalism. In these circumstances the Muslims will be well advised not to follow the National Congress blindly. The Mashriq finds fault with Government for granting reforms to India, inhabited by so many communities diametrically opposed to each other and having statesmen and leaders like Messrs. Malaviya, Lajpat Rai, Moonje, and Hardayal who cannot understand matters and act with caution. The country is addicted to serfdom and will remain subject for ever. There are Muslims, too, who are not free from blame, but they are the same who have been hankering after friendship with the Hindus for many years in the past. Whatever the decision of the Congress and League may be the Muslim public is for the maintenance and protection of its separate political rights. The best thing would be to allot an equal number of seats to Muslims in every elected body, but in case this is found impossible the Delhi decision of the Congress in regard to Muslim rights should be accepted.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

Muslim papers strongly resent the remarks in the Hindu press against Abdul Rashid and say that they are intolerable, especially after his execution. The Medina writes:—If in abusing Abdul Rashid the object of Hindu papers is to hurt the feelings of the Muslims we are sorry that they are paving the path for a serious disturbance. The Hindus ought to think that the Muslims also have pens in their hands, tongues in their mouths, and own newspapers. If some Muslim who is unable to control himself retaliates by using the same words about the late Swami Shraddhanand who will be responsible? The Muslims have been listening to all this abuse for full two weeks. See that their cup of forbearance does not overflow. The Rohilkhand Gazette complains that the Arya Samaj is broadcasting small tracts in villages in which the heads of Islam have been filthily abused. These doggerels are loudly recited, and it is feared that self-respecting Muslims might not be able to tolerate this insult and the rustics might get enraged and riots might spread to rural areas also. These booklets are named "Islam ka ticket," "Allah Mian ki untni," "Asli Quran," "Drama Tabligh", "Vedic Dharma tapancha", etc. Government should stop the circulation of such literature. In another article the same paper regrets that present-day education and culture have completely encompassed the ruin of Muslims. Those races which used always to bow their heads before Islam have no respect left for it and make false imputations against its religious heads. Our compatriots have started a vigorous propaganda against us. The shuddhi movement is meant to gain political advantage for the Hindus by augmenting their numbers. To achieve this object violent methods are being resorted to in some Hindu states and zamindaris. The sangathan movement has made the Hindus fearless of the law. The training in the use of arms is not meant for self-defence, but as has been proved by certain recent riots all this is meant to oppose Muslims, to lower the prestige of Government, and to establish Hindu raj. The poison is permeating the body politic everywhere. Muslims are being repeatedly defeated in the councils, and efforts are being made to establish a Hindu majority in the provinces. The lesson of communal and religious partiality is being taught to officers of their community in the law courts. They engage lawyers of their own community to argue their cases in the courts of law. Nay, this principle is kept in view in every department of life. Hindu merchants are advised to rob Muslim customers by charging double prices for their wares. Information is collected as to the number of vacancies in various Government departments and whether the appointing officers are Hindus or Muslims. It is a pity that even in these circumstances certain Muslim leaders are not giving the right lead to their community. Referring to the failure of the Punjab Government to discover any Muslim conspiracy behind the recent murders of Hindus even after the most diligent efforts the Hamdam demands that that Government should now investigate the strong Muslim suspicion that Arya Samajist conspiracy was mainly at the bottom of all the communal disturbances. Even an impartial paper like the Times of India had drawn attention to the matter, but no step has been taken in this direction so far. Do not the Garhmukteswar and other riots of a similar nature show that there is some organized conspiracy at their back and that the Arya Samaj, which wants to shift its responsibility to other shoulders, has a considerable hand in it.

The Aryan Congress.

Muslim papers continue to protest vehemently against the resolutions passed by the Aryan Congress, specially that relating to the enlistment of volunteers for civil disobedience. The Rohilkhand Gazette writes:—The All-India Aryan Congress has passed resolutions asking for ten thousand volunteers pledged to death, a defence fund of fifty thousand rupees, and satyagrah with local option. The real object of the enlistment of this horde of volunteers is to put down the Muslims everywhere and to overwhelm them under Mahasabhiate forces and so to crush and ruin them that they may not be able to progress under British rule. Satyagrah, which has been responsible for so much disorder in the past, is to be revived. It is necessary for the defence of the religion of Islam in India that Muslims should not keep Islamic kingdoms ignorant of the designs of the enemies of the faith. Afghanistan, Turkey, Persia, etc., are not meant for this alone that we should sacrifice our lives and property in their difficulties while they should not help us in our sufferings. If owing to the intrigues of these ten thousand volunteers a single riot occurs, and if the existing administration betrays the least trace of pro-Hindu bias, we should take the help of that feeling of brotherhood which is prevailing throughout the world. When the sangathanists can enlist ten thousand volunteers there seems no reason why Muslims should not organize the Ali Ghol. So, through the kindness of the Arya Samaj, the fires of communalism do not appear to be dying out; rather relations are becoming more and more strained every day. In another article the paper writes:—The neo-Aryans held a conference last week at Delhi. These renegades showed their greed and avarice in their funny speeches. Shanti Swarup said that when they remained steadfastly true to the Arya faith hundreds of Aryas would become prepared to inter-dine and inter-marry with them. This is a popular device to ensnare sensuous people. If the propagation of the Vedic faith depends on inter-dining and inter-marriage (lit. bread and daughter: roti beti) it should have nothing to do with spirituality. India is a famine-stricken country. There are thousands of starving people to be found in the streets and these slaves of their stomachs would gladly enter the samaj and become prepared to inter-dine. As regards the alliance of daughters (beti ka beohar) it is a play-thing for those afflicted by love. Sycophantic rajas used to send their daughters to the harems of Muslim emperors in the past, and now these people sacrifice their hearts and religion for the worship of beauty. They can select ladies of thrilling (lightning) beauty from Samajist seraglios. Again the fountain-head of niyog is rippling to slake their thirst. From the speech of Shanti Swarup it appears that the Arya Samaj is a materialistic and political body and bread and daughter are regarded as spiritual attractions.

United Provinces Political Conference.

Hindu papers generally commend Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant's address as president of the session of the United Provinces Political Conference held at Aligarh. The Leader writes:—The presidential address ably and eloquently expressed the views and feelings of a considerable section of Indian politicians who can now hopefully look forward to another upheavel of popular feeling for which they must feel deeply indebted to the good offices of Lord Birkenhead and other reactionaries whose counsel has prevailed, and which will inspire new life into the movement for swaraj. The president dealt with the questions of music before mosques, cow-slaughter, conversions, and sangathan and tanzim in a commendable spirit which was informed with breadth of outlook and practical commonsense. The Aj endorses the views of Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant on the question of the boycott of the Royal Commission and says that if the leaders act with wisdom on this occasion in pursuit of the boycott movement there is every likelihood of those forces being re-awakened which make for the uplift of fallen people. The leaders of all the political parties should meet on the Congress platform to show to the world that Indians with one voice are ready to oppose the national insult offered to them There is no doubt that the general and local strikes suggested by Panditji will result in no direct gain, but they will surely inspire self-respect among the people and also the desire to attain swaraj. The leaders should not only not go before the Commission themselves, but they should at the same time prepare the people for the attainment of their national rights through every legitimate and peaceful means. The Anand remarks :—The speech delivered by Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant is important in many respects. It truly represents the public opinion in these provinces regarding the Statutory Commission.

Political propaganda.

A number of Hindu papers commend the appeal of the Hindu Mahasabha for the observance of the Geeta day on December 5. In the course of its editorial article the Gyan Shakti remarks :—The Geeta holds a very high place among the scriptures. The present condition of India is attributable to her not acting in conformity with the teachings of the Geeta. We are sick of hearing from the lips of coward Hindus that "Ahimsa is the greatest religion." Years of suffering and slavery have made the Hindus oblivious of this teaching in the Geeta: —"If thou art killed, thou shalt enter heaven and if thou winnest thou shalt enjoy secular sovereignty. Therefore, O! Arjuna, get up and prepare thyself for battle." At that time there was no Iyengar, Das or Nehru in the Hindu community, and there was no such peace-loving organization as the Congress, otherwise Lord Krishna would never have given such an advice. There were very few impotent, cowardly and weak persons then. Only Arjuna seemed to have an inclination towards Ahimsa but Lord Krishna removed his misgivings so convincingly that the idea of Ahimsa could not even be entertained till the time of Buddha. Had not the sermon of the Geeta been preached to Arjuna at that time he, too, would have become a C. R. Dass. The Vedic gospel that God does not reside in the heart of a coward is too true. This is why cowardliness has been so strongly condemned in the Geeta. What a nice teaching it is: "O! Arjuna, do not cultivate impotency. It does not behove persons like thee to do so. Give up faint-heartedness and stand up." These teachings should be exhibited as mottoes in the Congress and Hindu Sabha pandals. It is also necessary that December 5, 1927, should be observed as Geeta day throughout the country, so that the people may bestow particular attention on the Geeta. In the course of an impassioned article, calling upon labourers to rise against the oppressions of capitalists, the Vartman says :—These men who commit dacoities in the name of trade have devastated towns and villages. These selfish men have converted into a terrible hell this world which was like heaven. To serve their ends these greedy persons have left no stone unturned to annihilate other men. Crores of labourers of this country are starving, but capitalists are passing their days in luxury. Labourers: You have tolerated a good deal. Rise up now. Recall the atrocities perpetrated by these capitalists and wake up to establish your own government. Show to the world that you know full well how to die for your rights. The Russian Communists expect that your emancipation will lead to the salvation of the world. India depends on you for her liberty.

The Delhi riot.

The Sudharak questions the propriety of the action of the Muslim community in lavishing money on the defence of Abdul Rashid, and says that a religion which sanctions the designation of mean cowardly assassins as martyrs can lay no claim to culture and civilization, at least in the present era. It refers to the disturbance that followed the execution of Abdul Rashid, in which one Hindu was killed and about 50 or 60 of them were wounded, and remarks:—Can even now the truth be disputed that the Muslims are ever ready to countenance the meanest act committed in the name of religion? Can any Muslim leader still proudly assert that Islam recognizes the religious freedom of every individual? A religion which can adore mean assassins like Abdul Rashid is either a travesty of religion or incomprehensible to its followers. Muslim barbarity has now been exposed to the world in its utter nakedness. The Abhyudaya refers to the tribute paid by Maulana Zafar Ali to Abdul Rashid and to his description of the assassin as a ghazi and says that that is a means of exciting the Muslims and producing other Abdul Rashids. The Punjab Government is very prompt in launching prosecutions. Let us see what action it takes against Maulana Zafar Ali. It may be that it is only the Hindus who at present suffer as a result of the process of exciting the ignorant Muslim fanatics, but it should be remembered that this will one day recoil on the heads of mullahs, maulanas, and maulvis also.

Garhmukhteshwar riot.

The Aligarh Mail writes:—Bania shrewdness has given to the Muslims the nickname of "bullies." But at Gramukhteshwar it was the Hindus who were actually bullies. According to the inquiry of Maulana Muhammad Ali Irfan, secretary of the Jamiat-i-Hind and a member of the staff of the Hamdard of Delhi, there is a Gurukul at Garhmukteshwar of which some members during their mischievous lectures on Indian history defamed past Muslim rulers and asked the Hindus not to have any dealings with Muslims. Provocative speeches against Muslims were delivered by sangathanists even in the mêla. The result was that an organized loot and brigandage was practised by Hindu rowdies. It is rumoured that many corpses of Muslims were thrown in the river. And it is a fact that many Muslims are untraceable. From all accounts of the Hindu atrocities at Garhmukteshwar it is evident that for some time the Muslims there were plunged into a holocaust of lawlessness. The United Provinces Government must institute a sifting inquiry into the whole episode in order to find out how far the police at Garhmukteshwar failed in saving Muslim life and property.

Muslim affairs.

The Rohilkhand Gazette protests against the practice obtaining in the Punjab Education department of recording the race of Muslim students as Arya, and says that this cognomen is now used to denote the followers of the Dayanandi faith. Muslim students cannot brook this insult that future Indian history should be falsified by styling them as Aryas. If the next census operations are placed in the hands of Arya Samajist officials they would enter the race of all Indian Muslims as Arya.

Reforms.

THE Press remains absorbed in the discussion of the constitution of the Statutory Commission. There is considerable speculation as to the outcome of the propaganda for the boycott of the Commission. Extremist papers, while welcoming the attitude of the Liberals, doubt if they will adhere to it to the end. The Indian Daily Telegraph quotes from the speeches and writings of some Indian leaders on the personnel of the Commission and writes:—Thus every Indian qualified to speak upon the implications of this move of the Conservative Cabinet has emphatically declared that he will have absolutely nothing to do with the Simon show. It is, of course, not very difficult to conscript a few political nonentities before the Commission to be able to declare the incompleteness of the boycott. It will not be an exaggeration to say in this connexion that the nefarious activities of the bureaucratic die-hards are in full swing. Be it as it may, if we, in the words of Mr. Jinnah, stuck to our own guns, we would come through the fire as a united and greater people than we have been in the past. The Aligarh Mail severely criticizes those Muslim leaders who are supporting the boycott of the Statutory Commission and says that they belong to that "small minority of educated Muslims who, for personal interests or idiosyncrasies, are playing to the tune of those Hindu diplomats who are out to boycott the Reforms Commission in defence of their communal interests which they are cleverly advertising to be the interests of the country." Proceeding, it writes:—We daresay that the rank-and-file of educated Muslims in every part of the country are solidly, stubbornly, and deadly opposed to the Hindu strategy of boycotting the Reforms Commission. We challenge the band of Muslim boycotters to take a referendum from the generality of educated Muslims on the subject and then talk of Muslim opinion on it being on their own side. With the only exception of organizations controlled by the Khilafatists who have lost all the insignificant hold they possessed during the Khilafat movement on educated Muslims all Muslim associations are becoming articulate and by means of resolutions are unequivocally announcing their opposition to the boycott movement.

The Swadesh warns Indians against being taken in by the Viceroy's speech on the Royal Commission, and says that though the Government contends that there would be anarchy in the country if it left it and that there was unrest and anarchy in it when it assumed control of its government from the hands of the East India Company, yet it conveniently forgets that this very Company was responsible for the rebellion of 1857. Surely the Government is very solicitous for peace in India, as it is also in Egypt, China, Africa, and all other places where the whites have to bear the burden of the maintenance of peace. Now-a-days there are Hindu-Muslim dissensions in the country. Riots occur almost every day. Secret murders also take place. Thefts and dacoities, too, are committed. Yet the Government, which professes to preserve order, sees only evidences of peace on all sides. If this is peace, what else is unrest? We prefer our old era of "unrest" to this peace. Queen Victoria's Proclamation was a characteristically occidental move to pacify the people. This was made quite clear by Lord Curzon in 1904, and since then such moves have been repeatedly practised.

Indians should be on their guard against them. Neither threats nor cajolery should deflect them from their course. Not only should the Royal Commission be boycotted, but a thundering agitation will have to be set afoot for the attainment of their rights. Atrocities will be perpetrated on them. They will have to undergo sufferings. Are the youths prepared to risk their life for the honour of the country, for liberty, and for giving a crushing reply to their opponents? Commenting on the debate on the Statutory Commission in Parliament the Pratap remarks:—The debate has made it abundantly clear that to Indians the British Labour party is as bad as the Conservative or the Liberal parties. All of them pursue the same policy in order to perpetuate our slavery. The ground adduced by Lord Birkenhead for the exclusion of Indians from the Commission is as hollow as it is hypocritical. He asserted that India was in the throes of anarchy when the British entered this country, and that it was they who delivered her, little knowing that his ancestors interfered with the political affairs of this country and eventually established themselves firmly by dint of knavery, artifice, fraud, and dishonesty. If Lord Birkenhead turns his eyes to the doings of those dead British traders who laid the foundation of British rule in India he will discover that the black deeds of Hastings, Dalhousie, or Canning find no parallel in the history of dishonesty in the world. If Lord Birkenhead thinks that his ancestors came to India to remove anarchy and restore tranquillity then it will have to be said that he is ignorant of even the A B C of Indian history. In the course of the debate Mr. Baldwin dogmatically asserted that when God desires any difficult task to be fulfilled He entrusts it to the British. It is, indeed, true that the task of plundering and of keeping in subjection a country with a hoary civilization is very difficult. But if Mr. Baldwin thinks that this task has been entrusted to him by God he is mistaken. The task of perpetuating the slavery of India has been entrusted to Baldwin and Britishers of his ilk by Satan, the ruler of Hell, who is dragging them towards destruction by leading them to think that they are heaven-born commanders. If to-day Britain regards this Satanic prompting as a divine injunction then all that we can say is that her intellect has become perverse, and perversity drags individuals, societies, and institutions towards destruction. The Aj says that Lord Birkenhead has made it clear that all the members of the Royal Commission will make the inquiry on pre-determined principles and lines. This shows that so far as India is concerned all the political parties of England have one and the same imperialistic and militarist outlook. If we do not realize this even now we, and not the British authorities, are to blame for it. The paper adds:—The fulminations of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald against the few Labour members who supported the Indian claim in connexion with the Royal Commission should open the eyes of Indians as to the help they can expect at the hands of the Labour party. In view of even Mr. Lansbury's volte-face Indians will only prove themselves to be fools if they hope for any real sympathy from any of the political parties of Britain in their struggle for liberty. The Shankar doubts the sincerity of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's advice regarding the revival of non-cooperation and non-payment of taxes and interprets it as an empty threat. The Abhyudaya endorses the view of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya that the only manly course left open to Indians is non-cooperation and non-payment of taxes and says:—If the Indian nation follows the path chalked out by Malaviyaji there is no doubt that we shall have established swaraj by the year 1930 or for the matter of that, within 10 days. The Hindi Kesari is sceptical about the future of the boycott movement in view of the discordant elements constituting the boycotters. The Anand commends the decision of the Central Provinces ministers to boycott the Statutory Commission and says that in all those legislatures where public opinion favours boycott it should be incumbent upon the ministers to non-cooperate with the Commission. But if they choose to slight public opinion they will bring an indelible blot on themselves, and their future career will be blasted.

In the course of an article discussing the question of the boycott of the Statutory Commission the Medina writes:—We have briefly referred to the schemes which the Conservative Ministry has adopted for the perpetual subjection of India, and from these everyone can draw the conclusion that owing to commercial, imperial, capitalistic, and military considerations Great Britain can never leave India. The Commission is constituted of a few individuals, and is a small specimen of the imperialistic designs of Conservatives. But even if the whole Parliament comes with a host of angelic men from England and Scotland they will do only that for India which the growth of imperialism demands and on the accomplishment of which their very life depends. To hope for anything else is to live in a fool's paradise. Commenting on Lord Birkenhead's speech in the House of Lords on the Statutory Commission the same paper says:—Every responsible and irresponsible Englishman will continue to talk like this so long as Indians remain engaged in internecine strife. If India were strong and united to-day a very good reply could have been given to these mad effusions. And this reply would have been the same as America gave to England in the last century. At that time also the British Premier claimed for Britain the right of ruling over America. But Washington and his self-sacrificing volunteers gave such a silencing and logical reply that Britain had no other alternative but to bow her head and the British flag was for ever removed from the American soil. The Rohilkhand Gazette writes:—Sensible Muslims are bewildered by the diversity of opinion regarding the Royal Commission. They have always been ardent devotees of freedom and can never forsake what they can easily get. It is a different matter that just as Hindus take swaraj to mean Hindu raj Muslims also desire Muslim self-government. Responsible persons have so far said nothing in support of the Commission. We are not aware of the political complexion of those Bombay Muslims who opposed a boycott and wanted a presentation of the Muslim demands before the Commission in the interests of the community. In another article the same paper says that Muslims are now bitterly rueing their participation in the swaraj agitation. They can benefit neither from constitutional reforms nor from swaraj nor can Gandhi's bogus programme take them any nearer to their ideal. Their only sheet-anchor is Muslim self-government. Swaraj can never safeguard the honour of their Prophet nor stop the circulation of blasphemous literature. It is not for swaraj to protect Muslim rights and freedom. They now want the Muslim self-government which was outlined by Sir Syed. Government had promised that when Muslims become fit for administration they would get their rights, and their empire would be restored to them. Muslims are now not behind any other race in progress. How is it, then, that others are now made partners in their powers and Government does not redeem its promise. The Desh Bhagat writes:—Government is afraid that if there is a complete boycott of the Simon Commission it would not be able to show its face to the world and would perforce have to concede the demands of Indian nationalists. If India were somehow to adopt complete non-cooperation with the British Government the edifice of Britain would surely topple down. It is because of this that Lord Irwin is trying to get up a party in India which would oppose the boycott. Loyalists, title-holders, jagirdars, and those who subsist on the crumbs of Government are being pressed into service for the purpose. The Shafi-Ghaznavi combination is co-operating with the Nawab-Raja party of the United Provinces to get the Muslim League to support the Commission. Some sycophantic Hindus will also chime in. But the clarion call of the Congress and the Khilafat Committee will not go unheard and nationalist Hindus and Muslims will ultimately win the day.

Political propaganda.

Exhorting the people to celebrate the Gita day and to act up to its teachings the Vartman writes:—The Gita is the key to independence. Even to-day, remembering the command "fight without compunction," we can enter the battle-field in order to put an end to our subjection. Even to-day, bearing in mind the passage "Happy the Kshattriyas, O! Arjun, who obtain such a fight," we can engage in a battle for the liberation of India. Remembering the passage "Weapons cleave him not, nor fire burneth him," we can cheerfully bear all the inhuman sufferings of jail in our efforts to free our Mother. Acting on the advice of the Gita we ought to resolve that we shall rest only when we have attained independence through organization. The inebriate imperialists should know that it is a hard task to keep in perpetual subjection the land of birth of Lord Krishna. In the course of an article, exhorting all the political parties to unite in the forthcoming Congress and to fix complete independence as their goal, the paper says :—The insult offered to Indians by their exclusion from the Royal Commission is due to their being a subject race. Such insults will not end even if we succeed in completely boycotting the Commission, for our rulers will then resort to other methods so that we may for ever forget the idea of equality and independence and dance to their tune like monkeys in the hands of a juggler. We ought, therefore, to ponder as to how we can throw off the yoke of slavery which is the root-cause of this insult. We should at the same time make up our minds that our object is not to secure rights for Indians in the Commission and partial reforms in the present system of government. We want to subvert the very system of Government which does not regard us as men, which is not prepared to recognize our birth-rights, which has rendered us so helpless, and as a result of which we are insulted in this manner both at home and abroad. We should all meet at the forthcoming Congress and resolve that our ultimate aim is complete independence and that nothing less will satisfy us. A correspondent, writing to the Pratap under the pseudonym "Yash" invokes the Hindu gods to bring about a cataclysm preceding reconstruction and says :— O! Brahma, begin thy dance of destruction. There is no room for hesitation on the score of an upheaval in the universe. Dance heartily and in utter self-abandonment to the accompaniment of the music of the boundless ocean of blood. Let not thy wishes remain unfulfilled! The correspondent concludes by praying the gods to accelerate this cataclysm and to make him the target of all the tribulations and sufferings that must follow in its wake.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Arya Mitra reproduces from the Tej of Delhi a few objectionable extracts from the local Muslim press and describes them as "instances of meanness practised by the Muslim press under the very nose of the Government at Delhi." It remarks :— It passes our comprehension why the C. I. D. sleeps over the publication of such filthy matter? Why is no legal action taken against editors who are guilty of such offence? Are not such indecent statements sufficient to provoke the Hindus? We regret that the Muslim press at the headquarters of the Government of India is transgressing the bounds of law, etiquette, and civilization and yet no action is taken against it. The Rohilkhand Gazette says that Swami Dayanand was a true spiritualist and nationalist and never wanted Hindu-Muslim discord. The bhajans of his time do not breathe hate and the offending chapters of the Satyartha Prakash are subsequent accretions. He could never have anticipated that spiritualism would be thus strangled after his death and the Stri Samaj would be established within the Arya Samaj, so that the scenes of the infamous clubs and hotels of Europe and America might be re-enacted here and their mysteries laid bare in the law courts. All sensible Indians should boycott the Arya Samaj for its discord-breeding activities and for its sacrificing political and spiritual rectitude for the sake of sensuous gratifications.

United Provinces Political Conference.

The Aligarh Mail writes :—The United Provinces Political Conference which was held here the other day was, for all practical purposes, a Hindu show and should better be called the United Provinces Hindus' Conference. Attendance in it was throughout very miserably poor. As to the achievements of the conference, they were against Muslim interests. The president of the conference himself poured out the venom of his communalist heart against the Muslims when in the course of his presidential address he held communal electorates to be the main-spring of communal dissensions. The Abhyudaya remarks :—Although we do not agree in its entirety with everything contained in the presidential address we must admit that it was opportune and nationalistic. We, however, fail to understand how the Pandit supported the resolution of the Calcutta Unity Conference regarding cow-slaughter. No patriot can disagree with the views of the president on the Statutory Commission.

Muslim affairs.

The Rohilkhand Gazette writes :—The Jamiat-ul-Islam has ascertained, after full and further inquiry, that the Muslim gaddis of Tamkohi and Salimgarh estates were compelled to keep top-knots, to shave their beards and to burn their dead and force and violence were used in making them forsake the Islamic faith. They were induced to adopt niyog instead of nikah. Referring to the proscription by the local Government of the Argham-ul-Kufra which was written in reply to the Radd-ul-Rafza, the Sarfaraz enquires why the latter book has not been similarly dealt with when it has been acknowledged by even the entire Sunni press to be offensive to Shias. The Haqiqat appeals for support for Mr. Faiz Muhammad's resolution in the Punjab Council for more Punjabi Muslim Judges in the Lahore High Court, and says that the grievance of Punjabi Muslims that there are very few Muslim Judges in their High Court and these also are not Punjabis is quite legitimate.

Indian States.

Referring to the appointment of the Commission to inquire into the affairs of the Bharatpur State the Swadesh says that it is hard to comprehend the policy which the Government has been following for some years past in regard to the Indian States. The Viceroy visits the Indian States and assures their Chiefs that their relations with the Government will become more cordial. If the object of interference in the Indian States is to reform them then there are various means to achieve this end. The British Government first allows these Chiefs to follow their sweet will and does not at all take notice of their licentiousness and atrocities. When they get emboldened by such practices the Government, in the name of its love of justice, wields such a weapon against them that they are reduced to a very sad plight. The Maharaja of Bharatpur has been grievously insulted by the appointment of this Commission. The Haqiqat is glad to find that the Government of India has, in accordance with the wishes of the Ruling Chiefs, at last appointed a committee to determine its future relations with Indian States. This committee should go further into the character of Chiefs and their relations with their subjects and the general progress of the latter. It is a fact that conditions in certain States have of recent years been simply indescribable. Debauchery, extravagance, indifference towards the welfare of the subjects, and prolonged absence from their States characterize the careers of most rulers and a sifting inquiry is needed to mend matters.

The Aryan Congress.

Al Khalil complains that Asghari Begum (now Shanti Devi) surpassed even Messrs. Malaviya and Moonje in provocativeness in her speech at the neo-Aryan Conference at Delhi. She went even so far as to call the Muslims badmashes and incited the Hindus to trace the conspiracy at the back of the murders of their leaders as Government favoured Muslims for their extra-territorial patriotism. She also exhorted her audience to develop strength to deal with badmashes with dandas (sticks). As these words have emanated from the lips of a woman who has been converted from Islam they will naturally generate enthusiasm, and might, it is feared, heighten those mischievous feelings which at present animate Aryas against Muslims and lead to undesirable consequences. In these circumstances Government would be well advised to anticipate the evil effects of such speeches and to adopt remedial measures.

The Revenue Bill.

Referring to the inability of the Government to enter into a compromise with the zamindars over the Revenue Bill the Aj remarks :—We congratulate the zamindars on their firm stand. It is no mean achievement that they are gradually developing that courage which is indispensable to opposition. The hope that zamindars, if they exercise introspection, will one day or another ally themselves with patriots is our only consolation although there is no probability of our hope fructifying in the near future. Something is better than nothing and hence selfish opposition is preferable to sycophancy.

Reforms.

A number of extremist Hindu papers while supporting the proposed boycott of the Statutory Commission also advocate a revival of the non-cooperation movement. They claim the right of self-determination and refuse to recognize the competence of the British Government to inquire into and pronounce on the fitness of Indians for further instalments of reforms. The Muslim press continues to complain bitterly of the attitude of Hindus towards the minorities and even those papers, like the Hamdam and the Medina, which at first earnestly supported the boycott of the Commission, now make their support conditional on a pact which would ensure the protection of Muslim rights. Referring to the proceedings of the meeting held at Allahabad to protest against the exclusion of Indians from the Commission the Leader writes :– Our countrymen have grown sick of the hypocritical protestations of men who in plain words want to retain the power which they have so far monopolized for as much longer as may be possible. They are not serious in their professions of leading India on to dominion status in the near future. They are following a policy marked by selfishness and by the arrogance of conscious might. It is this which our countrymen have to realize and fight. If they deserve a future worth having they will seize the opportunity now presented to them by the British Government to demonstrate that they cannot be trifled with, that they have a national will uncompromisingly resolute not to allow their Motherland to be injured, insulted and humiliated. It is to this will that sincere, feeling and forcible expression was given by every single speaker who took part in the Mayo Hall demonstration of Sunday. Commending Mr. Jinnah's statement regarding the attitude of Muslims towards the Commission the paper writes :—The observations of Mr. Jinnah meant for narrow-minded and timorous Muslim communalists are applicable to every section of any other community which favours cooperation with the Commission and deserve to be noted by them. They should appeal to all those who are not actuated by personal interests and to whom the support of the powers that be is not an article of faith. The duty of the vast majority of Hindus and Muslims is clear, and it is to uphold the honour of the Motherland by bringing about as effective a boycott of the alien Commission as possible. In an article published in the Indian Daily Telegraph Hardayal Nag writes :—The Royal Commission is coming to further consolidate British rule in India on a permanent basis. It will not be possible to boycott the Commission more fully than Milner Commission was boycotted in Egypt. Independence of Egypt that followed is not worth an hour's purchase. If India is to be freed from foreign domination the warfare that went on in 1920-21 must be resumed.

The Aj commends the friendly attitude of Colonel Wedgwood towards India as evinced in his letter about the Statutory Commission to Lala Lajpat Rai and says :—If our leaders preach to the masses the lesson of self-reliance, the day will not be far off when the Government will be as anxious for our cooperation as it was in the non-cooperation days. It is a pity that by abandoning non-cooperation we weakened ourselves and impaired our position. The country cannot gain anything by cooperating with the present Government.

It is impossible to utilize the present reforms without sacrificing self-respect, and as we have not been given an opportunity to work the reforms in an independent spirit, we refuse to make use of them in future as well. We agree with Colonel Wedgwood's views regarding the boycott of the Commission. We however support boycott not because Indians have been excluded from the Commission, but because through this Commission the British authorities are depriving us of our birth-right of making or marring our own future. The Sainik says that during the non-cooperation days the Government at once investigated all complaints against its officers and punished them most heavily if they were found guilty, but now as a result of the disorganization and dissessions in the country the bureaucracy is demonstrating a naked dance of its reprehensible policy. It is charged with showing open and sinful partiality to Muslim goondas and murderers, but it mocks its accusers. At such a juncture God has perverted the intelligence of the rulers and has led them to appoint a purely white Commission to report on the fitness of this ancient land. The cry of boycott is being heard from all quarters. The Commission will certainly be boycotted until the bureaucracy is brought to its knees. Popular demonstrations of boycott will completely blacken the face of the white Commission. But this is not enough. Efforts should again be made to enrol one crore members for the Congress, to make collections for the Tilak Swaraj fund and to reorganize the Congress. We should utilize this golden opportunity so to strengthen the Congress that we may be able to carry on incessant propaganda, agitation and constructive work. Then there will be no need for a Commission and we shall be able to take Swaraj whenever we like. The Surya emphasizes the need of drafting a constitution for India and then carrying on a vigorous agitation both in India and in England for its acceptance by Parliament. It says that there is no other effective means of protesting against the insult offered to India by the appointment of a non-Indian and exclusively Parliamentary Commission. The Abhyudaya writes:—The only self-respecting course open to us is to organize an effective boycott of the Statutory Commission under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi, and if by the year 1930 Government fails to grant us our human rights we should revive the non-violent non-cooperation movement in a more terrible form. In the course of an article commending the movement for the boycott of the Commission the Gramvasi writes:—Boycott alone will not be a sufficient answer to Britain's affront and insult to India. If Indians have the wisdom to profit by past experience, they should have recourse to non-cooperation which is the only infallible means by which British administration can be rendered impossible in India. Orations and wrangles will serve no useful purpose. What is now required is that we should give up all hopes from Britain and rely on our own strength and firmly resolve to attain Swaraj by means of non-cooperation. India's salvation lies in non-cooperation alone. The Sudarshan strongly criticizes Lord Birkenhead's remarks in the House of Lords regarding Parliament's responsibility towards India and says:—To force one's rule on the people of another country, to destroy all its commercial resources and then to dump one's own goods on it by placing its citizens under the grip of steel claws in the shape of laws, to enrich one's country by appointing one's countrymen to high offices after condemning the inhabitants of the subject country as unfit, to assume the entire control of the army by disarming the people through distrust—if all this is responsibility of Parliament, then what act is that which can be regarded as irresponsible? If such a speech can be characterized as the expression of a simple mind, as has been done by the British political parties, then there can be no hypocritical speech in this world. The Kisan opines that the agriculturists being a backward community are not in a position to boycott the Statutory Commission. It asks educated agriculturists to send to the "Kisan Office", Rae Bareli, a statement of disabilities of the peasants in their respective tahsils so that there may be facility in preparing their case for the consideration of the Commission. The Hamdam considers that it is necessary to frame a constitution removing all mutual suspicions before the proposed boycott of the Statutory Commission can succeed. It is ominous in these circumstances, it says, that some Hindu leaders want to postpone the composing of communal differences. This view is inspired by cunning and selfishness and is only an artifice to perpetuate Hindu supremacy. Instead of taking advantage of the temporary ebullition of enthusiasm created by the boycott agitation, a calm and dispassionate view should be taken of matters and a pact must be reached which might finally end all injustice by the majority and protest by the minority. Failing such a compromise the boycott would not at all succeed and the minorities at least would surely not join in it. Will the Hindus not be generous enough to treat their Muslim compatriots as the Irish Catholics treated their Protestant co-nationals or the Egyptian Muslims their Coptic comrades? The intolerance of the Hindu majority will prove the undoing of the political future of India. In another article the same paper expresses grief that opinion in England is not at all disconcerted by the boycott agitation in India and is confident that this froth will soon settle down. It exhorts Indians to decide upon their attitude after the fullest deliberation and to show firmness in refusing to succumb to Sir John Simon's seductions. Al Khalil is sorry that in spite of their bitter experience of injustices and intolerance in the past most Muslim leaders are thoughtlessly joining the movement for boycotting the Simon Commission without realizing that they are thereby seriously prejudicing the interests of their community. Muslims can never forego their just rights and must insist on a fair pact. They must be assured of their own position before they participate in India's struggle for freedom. If the Muslim leaders want to join the boycott at all costs and would not have a previous understanding, they should say so in plain words. If we cannot get our rights from our own countrymen, how can we secure them from foreigners.

Indian states.

The affairs of Indian states have received considerable attention in the Press this week. Referring to the Viceregal announcement regarding the appointment of a small expert committee to report upon the relationship between the paramount power and the Indian states the Pratap remarks:—Our rulers derive the maximum advantage from the knowledge that the Indian states have proved to be great obstacles in the way of the nation's struggle for freedom and that they may prove very useful in perpetuating British rule in India. It is therefore very probable that as a result of the recommendations of the Indian States Inquiry Committee the control of the Indian states may pass from the hands of the Government of India to those of the Imperial Government. Such a step will not only appease the Indian Chiefs, but will also make them puppets in the hands of the British Government so that they may prove helpful at times of crisis. We wish to warn the Indian Chiefs that they will be deceived if they do not keep pace with the times. They can maintain their existence only if they have the sympathies of their subjects, otherwise no power in the world can save them. The Haqiqat is sorry that despite the Princes Protection Bill the regimé of Lord Reading marked a startling and undesirable departure in British policy towards the states. The treatment meted out to Nabha, Indore, Hyderabad, Khairpur, etc., needs no repetition. The dark clouds of an inquiry commission were already hovering over the Maharaja of Bharatpur, but news is to hand now of a similar threat to the Maharaja of Jhabua. Efforts to secure the services of an administrator from Government have so far been unsuccessful, and it is feared that either the Maharaja of Jhabua will abdicate like the Maharaja of Bharatpur in a week or two or will accept a commission. The Oudh Akhbar recalls Lord Dalhousie's regimé in connexion with the present "severe attitude" of Government towards Indian states and goes on to say:—A large number of chiefs who had helped in establishing British rule in India have been dethroned on the most trifling pretexts. We consider it as extremely unwise to earn the ill-will of the chiefs by such unjustified interference. The Indian ruling chiefs are no doubt weak, but the blood of brave men courses through their veins and their high descent will not tolerate for long the insulting treatment to which it is at present being subjected. In view of these circumstances we are glad to see the Maharaja of Bharatpur taking up Government's challenge and accepting a commission of inquiry. The Aziz-i-Hind says that very disquieting news is being heard about Jhabua, but hopes that as the wound caused by the Indore affairs is still too fresh nothing will be done to victimize a second state in Central India and thus to unsettle the public mind. The Haq warns ruling chiefs that they should expect no change in the policy initiated by Lord Reading and should not only give up their personal extravagance and luxurious living, but also reform their administration and adopt a sympathetic policy towards their subjects if they want to save themselves from the disgrace and loss caused by the appointment of commissions.

Political propaganda.

A correspondent writing in the Aj under the pseudonym "A Nationalist" advises the Congress leaders to exploit the growing economic distress of the rural population and the unemployment prevailing among the educated and the semi-educated classes by making them realize their latent potential energies and by harnessing this man-power for political purposes. The Chand deplores the indifference of the Congress and the Hindu Maha sabha towards the organization of the sadhus and contends that an organized party of sadhus can create an awakening in the country such as hundreds of non-cooperation movements cannot. It is also of opinion that the services of the Sadhus can be profitably utilized in the spreading of education among the villagers which is indispensable for India's regeneration. The Desh Bhagat states that the Russian Government has during its independence celebrations made special concessions for the poorer classes. In other countries money is lavishly distributed on such occasions; there are feasts, the poor workers and peasants are forced to work and their money is heartlessly wasted; but in Russia the number of hours of work has been reduced, houses will be provided for workers and peasants, land revenue will be remitted, land will be provided for poorer people, pensions will be granted to old and indigent persons, people wounded in the war will be given insurance policies and capital punishment will be abolished. Celebrations have been held hundreds of times both in Britain and India and in the states, but no one has ever thought of doing anything for the good of workers, peasants and other poor people. Rather whips are always rained on these people in such celebrations. Such is the difference between the British and the Russian Governments for which the people of the world heartily love Bolshevik Government.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

The Gyanshakti says:—It is a fact that it is the Hindus themselves who are laying an axe at the root of the Hindu community. Even now there are some Hindu Congressmen who ignore realities and think that Swaraj can be attained by flattering the Muslims. Of what use will that Swaraj be which demands for its price the annihilation of the Hindu community? Swaraj cannot rightly be had so long as the Hindu community is divided into sub-sections and so long as Hindu Congressmen hold subservience to Muslims as the only means of the attainment of Swaraj. Hindu organization and the reformation of the Hindu community are indispensable for the establishment of Swaraj. The Rohilkhand Gazette contends that Swami Shraddhanand's murder was committed on patriotic and not on communal grounds, inasmuch as it was generally believed that he was in the pay of the Criminal Investigation Department and had undertaken to keep the Hindus and Muslims constantly at loggerheads. When the late Qazi Abdur Rashid returned from Kabul he could not bear to see this and on account of being a non-cooperater murdered him. The Parivartan complains that M. Zafar Ali Khan has published an article in the Zamindar of November 17, in which he has defended the wicked act of Abdur Rashid and has said that this Muslim had rendered a remarkable service to the dignity of mankind and to religion. Inciting to murder and violence the Maulana has said that Muslims have the right to treat the revilers of their religion as they choose if the Indian Penal Code is helpless to deal with the danger. This is open incitement to murder and violence and we are surprised that Government has taken no notice of this so far. M. Zafar Ali Khan has clearly violated the law in this article and it is imperative that this breaker and enemy of peace should be suitably punished.

The Congress.

The Vartman says that instead of placing before the British Government any scheme of reforms the Congress should prepare a constitution for an absolutely independent India. For this an expert sub-committee should be formed which should consult both

Indian and foreign politicians. Then we should explain to the thirty-one crores of Indians the real nature of Swaraj and prepare them for the sacrifices necessary for attaining it. On the basis of that constitution we should inaugurate our Swaraj campaign. Then it will not be possible to delude the public and we shall be able to sacrifice ourselves unitedly for winning our rights. The Medina fervently appeals to Muslims to join the next session of the Congress in large numbers and says :—We would ask those who oppose the participation of Muslims in the Congress whether they can point to even a single resolution which was really detrimental to the interests of Muslims or to any action which would prove that it has been remiss in the protection of the rights of any community. The Congress has always been anxious not to give any minority community cause to apprehend that its interests are not safe in the hands of this national body. Earl Winterton claims that the British Government alone is the custodian of the rights of minorities. We are, however, of opinion that it is only the Congress which can discharge and is discharging the duty of protecting the rights of minorities. At present as an inevitable result of the poisonous atmosphere of subjection the Congress appears to be paralyzed, but the time will soon come when it will become a powerful body and its decisions will have the force of royal mandates for the country. It is, however, essential that before such a time comes Muslims should have their rights clearly defined by the Congress and have a sacred national pact effected by it. This is only possible if they sincerely and earnestly take part in the Congress.

The Cinematograph Committee.

In the course of two leading articles the Aj gives a short history of the trade policy of Britain with special reference to India and says:—As a result of this policy Indian industries have been ruined. India has been sucked and Britain has flourished. Now the British Government has adopted the policy of Imperial preference which is calculated indirectly to help British industries at the expense of India. Two provoking examples are furnished by the duty imposed on steel imported into India from foreign countries other than Britain and the appointment of the Cinematograph Committee. The avowed object of this committee is to stimulate Indian film industry and to protect Indian morals from undesirable foreign films. The real object, however, is to stimulate British film industry by imposing high tariff on American films. All talk of helping Indian cinema industry is false; it is a camouflage. Indians should be forewarned and should try to protect their interests. Otherwise sometimes in the name of saving their money and sometimes in the name of protecting their morals they will be ruined in the interests of British industries. The Oudh Akhbar urges that there should be no cinema shows in India until Indian films are produced with Indian capital and under Indian guidance as the present shows are not popular among Indians owing to their catering only for European play-goers. Indian films are undoubtedly shown off and on, but their number is infinitesimal. Care should also be taken to see that the films are not of a low moral standard and do not contain attacks insulting to anybody, community or faith. It must be insisted that foreign cinema companies are not needed and shows had better wait till Indian cinemas are organized.

The Kakori dacoity case.

A number of papers express deep sympathy with the condemned prisoners in the Kakori dacoity case and strongly criticize the Government for not commuting their death sentences. The Oudh Akhbar writes:—The indifference of Government, its pride of power, its breaches of promise and its opposition to the Indian demand for freedom have so disheartened and disappointed some Indian young men that utterly defying the law they begin to plan short cuts to freedom in signal disregard of the safety of their own lives and eventually reap the bitter harvest as in the Kakori case. In the end we cannot refrain from characterizing the decision of Government in rejecting the appeal of our four young men as heartless even though it may be based on justice. If the death sentence of these four accused had been commuted to transportation for life Government would have been able to make a gesture of generosity without any actual sacrifice and the grant of a fresh lease of life to these four prisoners would certainly not have weakened or shaken the foundation of the empire.

The King of Afghanistan.

The newspapers accord a warm welcome to His Majesty the King of Afghanistan and pay a tribute to his patriotic and progressive tendencies. Referring to the reception of His Majesty at Bombay the Leader writes :- The high and the mighty in this land may well envy the right royal reception accorded to His Majesty and may draw a useful lesson from the same. If they wish to win the hearts of the people they should be as true servants of India as His Majesty has been of Afghanistan.

The Aryan Congress.

The Chand commends the satyagrah resolution passed at the Delhi session of the Aryan Conference and says that satyagrah is the only weapon which can save the Hindu community from annihilation when the Muslims and the Government are arrayed against it. It exhorts the Arya Samajists to take a leaf out of the book of the Akalis and sacrifice even their lives for the sake of their religion if they want to emerge victorious from their struggle.

Sale of vegetable oil.

There have b en frequent suggestions in the Press for the restriction of the import of vegetable ghee and oil on the ground that they are detrimental to public health. The Oudh Akhbar complains of the scarcity of milch cattle and the consequent dearness of ghee and the deleterious and enervating effects of imported vegetable oil and appeals to the Indian municipalities to follow the example set by Lahore by levying a prohibitive duty on the imported vegetable product so that it may disappear from the market.

Reforms.

WITH some exceptions Hindu papers continue with unabated vigour the campaign for the boycott of the Statutory Commission. The Aj says that Mr. Jinnah's manifesto, which is logical and vigorous, thoroughly castigates traitors to the country and meets their arguments unanswerably. Although it may not have any effect on those unpatriotic Muslim leaders who have determined to go against their country by co-operating with the Royal Commission, it is to be hoped that the general Muslim public will take a warning from it and will refuse to stand by these traitors. The paper refers to the "backsliding" of the Labour party in connexion with the Commission and remarks that India thinks much better of genuine Conservative imperialists than of the Labour imperialists who are no better than pitchers of poison with milk at their mouth. The Anand writes:—Signs are not wanting to indicate that the Muslim League has freed itself from the grip of Sir Muhammad Shafi, and that there is little likelihood of the Statutory Commission receiving any support from it. This unprecedented unity on the boycott question is a happy augury for the future of this country and if it proves lasting, Government will be compelled to concede our demands in the near future. The Pratap apprehends that the prevailing unity on the boycott question will only lead to a multiplication of the existing wrangles and dissensions if the boycotters have conflicting aims. It points out the need of the clarification of the issue, and suggests that the proposed boycott should be defined as applying not only to the Simon Commission, but also to the committees of the House of Lords and the House of Commons which will consider the Simon Report and to the constitution which may be granted to India on the basis of this report. It says that a boycott which aims at anything short of this, will be inconsistent with India's sense of self-respect. Anyone who joins the boycott movement is pledged to reject the constitution which may be granted to India as a result of the labours of the Simon Commission. In short, the proposed boycott means swaraj by self-help The Samaya infers from the formation of committees at Madras and Bombay with the specific object of directing the boycott movement into right channels that Pandit Malaviya's advice has been negatived by the Liberals and the Independents. It regrets that even such a simple and moderate programme, as has been outlined by Pandit Malaviya, should have proved unacceptable to a section of Indian politicians when the situation demanded a much more vigorous and forward movement. It exhorts the people to boycott the Simon Commission after the manner of the Milner Commission and to non-cooperate with the British Government in every manner conceivable if it refuses to them a constitution as framed by the Congress. It is idle to dream of swaraj, says the paper, unless the country unanimously accepts Pandit Malaviya's programme and acts upon it. The Shakti says that the masses are indifferent towards the boycott of the Statutory Commission. It is only the newspaper-reading public which is concerned with it It is the distrust of the people in the Moderates which accounts for the absence of enthusiasm in the country despite Pandit Malaviyaji's vigorous statement, Mr. Chintamani's thundering agitation and the lengthy speeches of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir Ali Imam, Mr. Jinnah, and Dr. Annie Besant. In order that the masses should join the movement it is imperative that Mahatma Gandhi should lead it. Freedom cannot be won by Moderates. It will be won only by the courage of the Nationalists. The Abhyudaya disapproves of the action of the Muslims in laying down certain conditions precedent to their participation in the boycott of the Statutory Commission and warns the organizers of the boycott movement that a discussion of this question at the present juncture is not only futile, but is also calculated to create dissensions and thereby pave the path for the failure of the boycott movement. The Gyan Shakti justifies the exclusion of Indians from the Statutory Commission and says that if Indians are fit for swaraj they should not be afraid of being tested by an alien agency. Swaraj is not worth having if the people are not fit for it. The history of Russia and China proves this. Co-operation is preferable to boycott if the net result of both is the same. When the Muslims are going to co-operate with the Commission Hindus should not boycott it. If Hindus do so they will be acting most foolishly for which they will have to repent for a long time.

The Medina deplores that the Muslims are divided over such a worthless thing as the Royal Commission which cannot bring even the slightest change in their national life, and that men like Khwaja Hasan Nizami have made it a tool to achieve their selfish ends or to feed fat their ancient grudge. The Khwaja's strongest argument in favour of welcoming the Commission is that the Hindus are boycotting it. This means that if to-morrow the Hindus decide to welcome it he will urge the Muslims to boycott it. We agree with him that the Hindus are the enemies of Islam, but we would have bowed our heads before him if he had also produced some instances of Britain's friendship with Islam, such as the massacre of Delhi, the internment of Bahadur Shah, the destruction of Turkey, and the occupation of Arabia, etc. Co-operation with Christians is quite different from co-operation with the Government of India and the British politicians. Islam can never allow you to kiss the hands of those on whose skirts the blood of the Muslims has not yet dried up. Referring to a letter from Colonel Wedgwood to Lala Lajpat Rai, in which he has stated that Sir John Simon would not be influenced by the evidence of selfish communities in the matter of communal representation and would be able to anticipate the reality of the views of selfish people even before they give expression to them, the Hamdam says that a Hindu group has been busy in London since 1924, influencing important personages and statesmen and Members of Parliament against separate representation for Muslims, so that any understanding with Muslims may not prejudice the scheme of Hindu raj. It is probably because of failure in these efforts, it proceeds, that Lala Lajpat Rai has become so disgusted with national movements that he does not want to attend even the Congress session. Had Lala Lajpat Rai been more hopeful of Sir John Simon's attitude his party would have welcomed the Commission, but as Colonel Wedgwood's information is discouraging it has decided upon its boycott in a pique. But the boycott can lead to good only if Lala Lajpat Rai alters his angle of vision and co-operates whole-heartedly in the framing of a constitution on behalf of the country which will ensure the safeguarding of the rights of minorities.

Hindu-Muslim relations.

In the course of an article severely condemning Hindus for their supineness and submissiveness the Vartman writes:—If we were alive we should have shown ourselves determined to avenge the brutal atrocities perpetrated on us. If we were alive, we would not have looked on passively at the dishonour of our mothers, sisters, and daughters. If we want to pass our days as worms of slavery what right have we to call ourselves alive? We are impotent as we are afraid of death. Drawing the attention of the Government to a Muslim publication entitled the Talqin-i-Hindu, which it says contains most indecent attacks on Rama, Krishna, Sita and Draupadi, the Arya Mitra observes:—When the Government is asked to proscribe or take action against such books it expresses its inability to do so on the ground that there is no public agitation against them, and when any such agitation is started it prosecutes the agitators. It is very strange and deplorable that while it institutes proceedings against the writers of the Vichitra Jiwan and Rangila Rasul it takes no action against the objectionable publications of the Muslims. Do not the Hindus love their religion as the Muslims do? In the course of an article warning Hindus against the activities of Muslims and exhorting them to reform Hindu society the Hindu Mitra says:—Muslims are not anxious either for the political emancipation of the country or for the boycott of the Commission. They are hatching new conspiracies for harassing the Hindus. On the one hand, they have formed a secret society at Noakhali for the demolition of Hindu temples and on the other Ghaznavi and others are girding up their loins to make the Commission a success. In the Punjab they are threatening the Hindus with deadly knives that either they should accept Islam or bend their heads before them. Swami Shraddhanand and Manak Chand were murdered and attempts were made on the lives of Rajpal and Swami Nirbhayanand. In spite of such horrible bloodshed the Muslim assassins did not refrain even in the least from their muderous deeds. They approached even Lala Lajpat Rai with the horrible intention of murdering him. Every day flowers are offered at the tomb of Abdur Rashid, and a mêla of Muslim fanatics is held there daily. Paid Muslim propagandists are moving about in several districts of the United Provinces for creating a hostile atmosphere against the Hindus. Terrible reports of the kidnapping of Hindu boys and girls are so numerous that it is becoming impossible to compile them. The situation has become so serious that at several places Hindus cannot perform their religious rites. For the sake of their religion Muslims shed their blood like water. Through this virtue of theirs Muslims are harassing twenty-two crores of Hindus. The very existence of Hindus is in danger. On the one hand, Muslim goondas, like Rahu (a demon), are after Hindu widows, and on the other like Satan they want to devour the Hindu untouchables. Everywhere the Muslim net is spread. The alarm bell was sounded repeatedly, but the Hindu community was not roused and continued to lop off its limbs with the result that seven crores of Muslims are ready to swallow up the Hindu community itself. It is the duty of every Hindu to devote himself to the task of reforming the Hindu society and resolutely to face Muslims. The Hamdam regrets that at the present juncture, when all discord-breeding activities should cease, people of that particular mentality which prefers strife in the country are busy with their pursuits in blissful ignorance of the fatal effects of their inflammatory propaganda on the present situation. Only recently the celebration of the anniversary of Swami Shraddhanand was proposed and meetings of Hindus were held in this connexion in every city at which speeches were made to incite them against the Muslims and memories of incidents were revived which are bound to alienate Hindus from Muslims for good. Noted Hindu journals brought out shahid numbers in which scenes causing extreme provocation and hatred were painted and coloured pictures were presented of murders by irresponsible persons and incidental events. It is a pity that sangathanist papers are not at all giving up their strong language and are busy as usual with their shameful task of widening the gulf between the two communities. The Najat publishes an ode by H. Ali Sher Khan, Zahin, Fatehpuri, giving the date of the martyrdom of Qazi Abdur Rashid in which the following lines occur among others:—He cared not for his life and grieved not for his family, it would be quite proper if this were called sacrifice. Rashid, supporter of the faith, bravo! may God reward thee; thou wast a devotee (lit. ready to sacrifice life), a standard-bearer of Islam. Everyone in his heart believes in thy martyrdom; that Muslim is unthinking who denies this. Who can question thy being destined for paradise! Thou hast ascended the gallows in the path of God. Rashid of virtuous mien has sacrificed himself for the community.

Political propaganda.

The Swadesh deplores the lull in the political life of the country after 1921 and says that since that year the Congress had done nothing to place a practical and stimulating programme before the people and carry forward the struggle for freedom. The enemy has been launching attacks upon attacks upon them, but their commanders have never rallied again. If the Congress fails this year, too, to adopt such a programme the country will devise its own means for the arbitrament of its destiny. Communalism can best be met by such a programme. The question of internments can be utilized to frame this programme which should be pushed forward to every nook and corner of the country. The boycott of the Statutory Commission can form another basis for it, and the whole country can be aroused by a well-directed propaganda in this behalf. Liquor and foreign piece-goods shops should be picketted. Unity can be preached not on the basis of pacts, but in the name of bread for the poor, hungry peasants. Referring to Emir Faisal's return from England on the British refusal to recommend Mesopotamia for membership of the League of Nations the Najat writes :—Such is always the fate of those who repose faith in the false promises of the Britishers. So long as the Emir is destined to receive kicks he will always go to England only to return disappointed, and the Britishers will never fulfil their promises even to the day of judgement. This incident serves as a warning to all those who hope to get anything from the Britishers. The Britishers regard those who hope to get anything from them to be fools, and they fear only those who do not beg for their rights but achieve them with their own strength. The Desh Bhagat wonders whether Mr. Saklatwala is being refused permission to enter India because when he was here last time he infused new life among the young men of India and exposed the cunning moves of the British Government. The truth is, it goes on to say, that the powers that be never like that Indian young men should become so fearless and should tread the straight course of freedom. Earl Winterton's statement that Mr. Saklatwala will not be granted a passport so long as he persists in his present attitude means that he can receive a passport if he does not expose British trickeries and does not help Indian youths to tread the straight path of freedom. In other words. he can get a passport if he sings praises of the Tory Government. But Shapurji Saklatwala is never going to accept such conditions even at the risk of exile. The British imperialistic Baldwin Government may place what obstacles it chooses in the path of India, but the waves of freedom will sink the iron chains of the Government to the bottom of the sea.

The King of Afghanistan.

Newspapers, both Hindu and Muslim, warmly commend the speeches delivered by the King of Afghanistan. Referring to the advice given to Indian Muslims by His Majesty the Leader writes :—His brief visit to this country, in the course of which he has given such wholesome advice to its people, ought to produce a beneficial effect on the communal atmosphere. He said nothing that was novel or extraordinary; but if the simple truths he inculcated are acted upon there is no doubt that the demon of communal discord will be laid low. Writing in a similar strain the Indian Daily Telegraph says :—Indians will, we hope, henceforth treat Afghanistan as a kind and sympathetic neighbour and dissociate themselves with all those who habitually trot out the bogey of the North-Western Frontier danger. The Aj remarks that the highest authorities of India can be envious of the reception accorded to the Amir of Kabul by all classes and communities of Indians. This enthusiastic reception is accounted for by the fact that the Amir is one of the independent Kings of Asia and has thus national sympathy with subject India. His Majesty's description of mullahs is literally true. When Hindu and Muslim priests meet the same fate in Asia as was the portion of the clergy in Europe then alone this continent can know true peace and happiness. Turkey has shown the way to Asia by rendering mad mullahs helpless. Afghanistan, too, is going to follow suit. It is a happy augury. The Desh Bhagat is suspicious of Government's refusal of permission to the Bombay Corporation to present an address to the King of Afghanistan and inquires why the Karachi Municipality was allowed to give an address to him and the London Corporation to King Fuad? There must, it asserts, be some secret reason for this refusal.

Indian States.

The exclusion of Indians from the committee appointed by the Secretary of State to report upon the relationship between the paramount Power and the Indian States has been strongly criticized by some papers. The Leader writes :—As in the case of the Statutory Commission, the constitution of the committee is all British, not a single Indian prince or Indian public man being apparently considered fit for appointment. The theory of subordinate alliance has been fully maintained in the constitution of the committee and the princes of royal blood must now make up their minds to appear as petitioners before it to plead their cause. The Indian Daily Telegraph writes :—The appointment of the Butler Committee is an affront to the Indian princes and it remains to be seen how many of them have inherited the spirit and courage of their forefathers for protecting the rights, privileges and properties bequeathed to them.

The Hamdam says that the appointment of Sir Harcourt Butler as Chairman of the States Inquiry Committee will be warmly welcomed by his numerous friends throughout the length and breadth of India. His wide Indian experience added to his tenure of the Foreign Secretaryship of the Government of India eminently fits him for this office. The Haqiqat asks for the inclusion of a ruling Chief in the Committee so that the charge of partiality may not be preferred against it. It is a pity, it goes on to say, that Indians have been excluded from it. Sir Harcourt Butler's appointment is no doubt certain to be viewed with general approval as he has passed the entire period of his service in India, mostly in the United Provinces, and has always had ample opportunities of acquainting himself with Indian Chiefs and their States. Moreover, his statesmanship and sympathetic treatment will also re-assure Indian Chiefs to some extent. But his two colleagues can hardly prove acceptable to the Chiefs. An inquiry is also needed, as we have already urged, into the internal affairs of States and the luxury and extravagance prevailing there so that there may be an improvement in these respects also. The Jatvir disapproves of the "notice" served by the Government of India on the Maharaja of Bharatpur and remarks :— We view the Government communiqué with mixed feelings of pain and surprise. The news of the appointment of the Commission has created great dissatisfaction in the Jat community all over India. Let the Government know that the Bharatpur State is honoured as much by the Jat community as Mecca is by Muslims. The very mention of the name of the Bharatpur state has the effect of stirring blood in the veins of every Jat and of creating overflowing enthusiasm. We, therefore, urge the Government of India to bring the Commission affair to an end. Government is greatly mistaken if it has an evil eye on the Maharaja, who is very popular among his subjects and enjoys an international reputation. It is the traditional policy of the Government to find fault with Indian Chiefs, make a mountain of a mole-hill, dethrone them, and take over the administration of their States in its own hands on the first opportunity available. We warn the Government to refrain, in recognition of the services of the Jat community and of the Maharaja himself, from committing any mischief, otherwise there will be discontent which it will be difficult to control.

The Jamait-ul-Ulema.

Commenting on the presidential address delivered by Maulana Anwar Shah at the Peshawar session of the Jamait-ul-Ulema-i-Hind, the Medina says that the Maulana made a forcible exposition of the term "ulelamra" (one who gives orders, emperor, commander) and exposed those votaries of the Government and imperialism who, in order to achieve their selfish and cowardly ends, put forward the lame excuse that every "ulelamra," whether he is a Muslim or not, can demand loyalty and obedience from Muslims. By quoting the Hadis and commentaries he has established that "ulelamra" is that ruler who keeps in proper order the organization of the Muslim community, acts as its trustee, and is a reliable and powerful man, i e., a Muslim. The Najat says :—The presidential address shows that the Muslims are more patriotic than the Hindus. If Pandit Malaviya, Lala Lajpat Rai, and Dr. Moonje compare their patriotism with that of this "mullah" they are sure to find that if any one, other than the British Government, is hostile to India's freedom it is the narrow-minded and short-sighted leaders of the Hindu community. The day will soon come when India, which has been blinded by Pandit Malaviya's magic, will regain her sight, and the Hindus will long to be taken out from that infernal pit into which they have been hurled by the Pandit. The Muslims ought to carry on trade and the work of tabligh, sacrifice cows, and uphold the honour of their mosques, but should not allow themselves to be led away by the satanical politics of the times.

The "Arjun" case.

Commenting on the sentences passed on Professor Indra and Mr. Satyakam in the Arjun case the Pratap remarks :—The sentences find no parallel for callousness. We are prepared to co-operate with the Government if it is really anxious to suppress the promoters of communal hatred, but we are convinced that it does nothing to suppress them. We have sufficient proof in our possession to show that the propagation of communal hatred receives an impetus from the conduct of the officials. If the Government keeps its hounds under control the communal fire is bound to subside considerably, but it will defeat its object if it confines itself to making a scape-goat of a few journals. The Abhyudaya writes:—It will be unanimously conceded that even if the findings of the trying magistrate regarding the offence committed by Professor Indra and Mr. Satyakam are correct the sentences passed on them are unduly severe and inhuman. The Anand says:—As the matter is still sub judice we refrain from making any comments beyond expressing our surprise and regret at the attitude of the Government in abandoning all sense of sympathy and impartiality in its treatment of the Hindus. The Muslim press openly abuses the Hindus and incites the Muslims against them and yet the Government is favourably disposed towards it whereas it is very prompt in arresting and imprisoning those Hindus who dare to answer such mean attacks. Professor Indra's only offence is that he is the editor of a courageous Hindu journal and persistently strives for the protection of the rights of the Hindus. The Swadesh says that the sentences inflicted on the editors of the Arjun are unparalleled in severity in communal cases under British rule in this country. It is noteworthy that Muslim papers carry on their trade with impunity. Such a policy on the part of the Government cannot end communal unrest.

The Congress.

The Hamdam says that Dr. Ansari's patriotic appeal for participation in the Madras Congress breathes such noble sentiments that no lover of India can refuse to respond to it. But following in the wake of Lala Lajpat Rai, his famous lieutenant, Bhai Parmanand, the erstwhile president of the Aryan Congress, has replied that the differences between Hindus and Muslims are based on fundamental principles, and that their ideas are so far wide apart that their co-operation on a common platform is an impossibility in the present circumstances. To him the unwillingness of Muslims to abandon themselves to the mercy of the Hindu majority betrays lack of patriotism. He believes that the Hindus cannot benefit from swaraj at present on account of their disorganization and should not, therefore, boycott the Royal Commission. A careful study of this opinion of Bhai Parmanand not only exposes the prevailing mentality, but provides a helpful guide for chalking out future policies.

The Kakori case.

A number of papers have written impassioned articles on the execution of the condemned prisoners in the Kakori dacoity case. The Swadesh writes:—Vindictiveness, thou art more stony than stone and more satanic than Satan. O! devilish one, to-morrow morning thou wilt hang from the gallows like lizards our brethren who were mad after the liberty of the Motherland and whose patriotism has overawed even the hearts of the opponents. Was not this the crime also of de Valera, Napoleon, Zaghlul, and Kemal Pasha? How many times, then, were they hanged? But no, thou art only dogging India relentlessly. Those youths who were not even in their full bloom did not escape thy kindness despite their apology and repentance. These four handfuls of bones proved such a weight on the heart of the Government of India that it threw off the yoke of mercy and peace. The Government alone can know how it can suppress revolutionaries by throwing such challenges to them. The Pratap remarks:—What a cruel end? What would not these youths of the country, who may be called misguided but who were in no way devoid of patriotism and the emotion of youth, have become if they had lived and developed! Their sentences have got the same callousness about them which is to be seen everywhere in the country at present. The unanimous prayer of the country for mercy which did not imply release, but merely the commutation of the death sentence to one of life-long imprisonment has gone unheeded. Even knowing that these youths followed a wrong path a study of the farce of the Kakori trial leads one to think that it is a great sin to be a youth in this country!
